THE TREATMENT OF THE EYES AND EARS

When the eyes are out we are all out. Ailments of the eye require expert treatment.

People know very little about their own eyes, and many physicians are not well informed in regard to the treatment of these important organs. On another page of this paper appears an advertisement of Dr. F. G. Curts, of Kansas City, whose testimonials prove the statement that many people have been successfully treated by him in their own homes by mild medicines. In regard to ear troubles, the testimony is equally strong and convincing. Dr. Curts has issued a book which is full of valuable information and should be read and referred to by everyone. Write Dr. F. G. Curts, 262 Gumbel Bldg: Kansas City Mo., and ask for a free copy of his Eye and Ear Book.

Comforting Hints from the Sisters

SURE CURE FOR FELON. Bind up in gunpowder, and keep well saturated with turpentine. FOR A CUT. If camphor is applied immediately it will stop the bleeding, and take out the soreness.

IDA MILLER, Hastings, Neb.

TO REMOVE STAINS FROM POLISHED MAHOGANY FURNITURE. Take a feather and brush with oil of Vitriol.

To whiten the teeth. Take one part of chloride of lime, fifteen parts prepared chalk, one half ounce of pulverized Peruvian bark, and a few drops of attar of roses. Use once a day.

CEMENT FOR BROKEN GLASS, CHINA, ETC Dissolve half an ounce of gum acacia in a wineglass of boiling water; add plaster of Paris sufficient to make a thick paste, and apply with a brush to the parts required to be cemented together.

A GOOD GREEN INK. Rub three and one half drams of Prussian Blue, and three drams of Gamborge with two ounces of mucilage, then add one half pint of water.

CAROLINE S. BROWN, Rockville, Conn.

WHITE KID SHOES can be cleaned by dipping a perfectly clean white fiannel cloth in a little ammonia, and then rubbing the cloth over a cake of white soap; after doing this, rub the solid places gently, and they will be white again. As the fiannel becomes soiled, change for a clean one.

fannel becomes soiled, change for a clean one.

To clean equart of water, wash your brushes and combs in this, and all grease and dirt will disappear, rinse, shake and dry in the sun, or by the fire. Keep nickel, silver ornaments and mounts bright by rubbing with woolen cloth saturated with ammonia. Equal parts of ammonia and turpentine will remove paint from clothing, even if it be dry and hard. Saturate the spot as often as necessary, and wash out with soapsuds. One teaspoonful of ammonia in a teacupful of water will clean gold or silver jewelry. A few drops of clear ammonia poured on the underside of diamonds, will clean them immediately, making them very brilliant. A few drops in a cupful of warm water, applied carefully, will remove spots from paintings and chromos. Ammonia inhaled will often relieve a severe headache.

Letters of Thanks

Letters of Thanks

DEAR FRIENDS:

Will you kindly admit a crippled brother to this page and let him visit with the sisters awhile? I have been a cripple nearly all my life. I am thirty-five years old, can't walk or use my legs at all, but creep around on hands and knees, on the floor, am strong in my arms, and help what I can with the housework. I have a tricycle and wheel around town when the weather is pleasant, but in the winter I can't get out doors at all, then sometimes the days are very lonely, with nothing to do to take up the time. I enjoy reading Comfort very much, and belong to Uncle Charlie's League, for he's such a jolly fellow, and so good to the shut-ins like myself. I am always glad to hear from any of our Comfort readers, and would like to get acquainted with any one sending a stamp for reply. I want to thank the few friends through Comfort, who were so kind to remember me with letters, post-cards, and reading matter; I answered some, but not all of them, and take this way to thank them. If the person of Lower Bridge, Oregon, who kindly sent some magazines to me, will please send his or her name and address to me, I would like to write to them.

Again thanking you all, with love and best wishes from your shut-in friend,

DANIEL H. DURHAM, 46 Washington Ave., Oneida, N. Y.

DEAR FRIENDS:

In response to request sent in by a friend, I received several nice letters and some pieces. You who have health cannot realize what a comfort it is to a shut-in to receive any token of kindness or sympathy from a far-away friend; it seems very ungrateful of me not to have returned thanks sooner, but owing to my feeble condition I have not been able to do so. Hoping you all will pardon my long delay,

Your shut-in friend,

PATTIE ODUM, Bunn, N. C.

"At work as usual. You are incorrigible. Any other woman would be so charmed with her conquest that her head would be quite turned by a certain pair of brown eyes that are considered irresistible. Come, get ready for your drive; it is almost five o'clock, and you know foreigners are too polite, too thoroughly well-bred not to be punctual. No, no, Miss Earl; not that hat, on the peril of your life! Where is that new one that I ordered sent up to you two days ago? Miss Earl, put your hair back a little from the left temple. Where are your gloves? You look charmingly, my dear; only too pale, too pale! If you don't contrive to get up some color, people will swear that Sir Roger was airing the ghost of a pretty girl. There is the bell! Just as I told you, he is punctual. Flve o'clock to a minute."

She stepped to the window, and looked down at the equipage before the door.

"What superb horses! You will be the envy of the city."

There was something in the appearance and manner of Sir Roger which often reminded Edna of Gordon Leigh; and during the spring he visited her so constantly, sent her so frequently baskets of elegant flowers, that he succeeded in overcoming her reticence, and established himself on an exceedingly friendly footing in Mrs. Andrews' house.

Now, as they drove along the avenue and entered the Park, their spirits rose; and Sir Roger turned very often to look at the fair face of his companion, which he found more and more attractive each day. He saw, too, that under his earnest gaze the faint color deepened, until her cheeks glowed like seasnells; and when he spoke he bent his face much nearer to hers than was necessary to make her hear his words. They talked of books, flowers, music, mountain scenery, and the green lanes of "Merry England." Edna was perfectly at ease, and in a mood to enjoy everything.

They dashed on, and the sunlight disappeared before Sir Roger turned his horses' heads homeward. When they reached Mrs. Andrews' door he dismissed his carriage and spent the evening. At eleven o'c hours I have spent with you. If I should not return to New York, will you allow me the privilege of hearing from you occasionally?"

His clasp of the girl's hand was close, but she withdrew it, and her face flushed painfully as she answered:
"Will you excuse me, Sir Roger, when I tell you that I am so constantly occupied I have not time to write, even to my old and dearest friends."
Passing the door of Felix's room, on her way to her own apartment, the boy called to her: "Miss Earl, are you very tired?"
"Oh, no. Do you want anything?"
"My head aches and I can't go to sleep. Please read to me a little while."
He raised himself on his elbow, and looked up fondly at her.
"Ah! how very pretty you are tonight! Kiss me, won't you?"
She stooped and kissed the poor parched lips, and as she opened a volume of the Waverly Novels, he said:
"Did you see Miss Morton?"
"Yes; she was on horseback, and we passed her twice."
"Glad of it! I guess she finds it as hard to get to sleep tonight as I do."
Edna commenced reading, and it was nearly an hour before Felix's eyes closed. Softly she put the book back on the shelf, extinguished the light, and stole upstairs to her desk. That night, as Sir Roger tossed restlessly en his pillow, thinking of her, recalling all that she had said during the drive, he would not have been either comforted or flattered by a knowledge of the fact that she was so entirely engrossed by her MS. that she had no thought of him or his impending departure.

When the clock struck three she laid down her pen and the mournful expression that she had no thought of him to departure.

When the clock struck three she laid down her pen; and the mournful expression that crept into her eyes told that memory was busy with the past years. When she fell asleep she dreamed not of Sir Roger but of Le Bocage and its master, of whom she would not permit herself to think in her waking hours.

vould not permit herself to think in her waking hours.

The influence which Mr. Manning exerted over Edna increased as their acquaintance ripened; and the admiring reverence with which she regarded the editor was exceedingly flattering to him. With curlous interest he watched the expansion of her mind, and now and then warned her of some error into which she seemed inclined to plunge, or wisely advised some new branch of research. So firm was her confidence in his mature and dispassionate judgment, that she yielded to his opinions a deferential homage, such as she had scarcely paid even to Mr. Hammond.

Gradually and unconsciously she learned to lean upon his strong, clear mind, and to find in his society a quiet but very precious happiness.

Edna's intense and dreamy idealism demanded a check, which the positivism of the editor supplied; and his extensive and rigidly accurate information, on almost all scientific topics, constituted a valuable treasury of knowledge to which he never denied her access.

Through his influence Edna made the acquaintance of some of the most eminent scholars and artists who formed this clique, and she found that his friendship and recommendation was an "open sesame" to the charmed circle.

One Saturday she sat waiting for Mr. Manning, who had promised to accompany her on her first visit to Greenwood, and, as she put on her gloves, Felix handed her a letter which his father had just brought up.

Recognizing Mrs. Murray's writing, the governess read it immediately, and, while her eyes ran over the sheet, an expression, first of painful, then of joyful, surprise, came into her countenance.

"My Dear Child: Doubtless you will be amazed to hear that your guandam lover."

of painful, then of joyful, surprise, came into her countenance.

"My Dear Child: Doubtless you will be amazed to hear that your quondam lover has utterly driven your image from his fickle heart; and that he ignores your existence as completely as if you were burled twenty feet in the ruins of Herculaneum. Last night Gordon Leigh was married to Gertrude Powell, and the happy pair, attended by that despicable mother, Agnes Powell, will set out for Europe early next week. My dear, it is growing fashionable to 'marry for spite.' I have seen two instances recently, and know of a third which will take place ere long. Poor Gordon will rue his rashness, and, before the year expires, he will arrive at the conclusion that he is an unmitigated fool, and has simply performed, with great success, an operation familiarly known as cutting off one's nose to spite one's face! Your rejection of his renewed offer piqued him beyond expression, and when he returned from New York he was in exactly the most accommodating frame of mind which Mrs. Powell could desire. She immediately laid siege to him. Gertrude's undisgulsed preference for his society was extremely soothing to his vanity, which you had so severely wounded, and in fine, the indefatigable manoeuvres of the wily mamma, and the continual flattery of the girl, who is really very preity, accomplished the result. I once credited Gordon with more sense than he has manifested, but each year convinces me more firmly of the truth of my belief, that no man is proof against the subtle and persistent flattery of a beautiful woman. When he announced his engagement to me, we we sitting in the library, and the library a writing and of teaching so constantly, the governess enjoyed the brief season of emancipation.

Mr. Manning's long residence in the city had familiarized him with the beauties of Greenwood, and the history of many who slept dreamlessly in the costly mausoleums which they paused to examine and admire; and when at last he directed the driver to return, Edna sank back in one corner of the carriage and said: "Some morning I will come with the children and spend the entire day."

She closed her eyes, and her thoughts traveled swiftly to that pure white obelisk standing in the shadow of Lookout; and melancholy memories brought a sigh to her lips and a slight cloud to the face that for two hours past had been singularly bright and animated. The slience had lasted some minutes, when Mr. Manning, who was gazing abstractedly out of the window, turned to his companion and said:

"You look pale and badly today."

CHAPTER XIII.

CHRISTMAS DAY. HE worshipers at St. Mark's heard the music of the bells as the Hetherton sleigh passed by, but none of them knew whither it was bound, or the scene which awaited the rector, when, his services over, he started towards home.

Lucy had kept her word, and, as Mrs. Brown heard the hall door open softly, she looked surprised at the sight of Lucy Harcourt, with her white face and great sunken eyes, when she mournfully said:

want to go to Arthur's room-the library, I white face and great sunken eyes, when she mournfully said:

"I want to go to Arthur's room—the library, I mean."

"Why, child, what is the matter? I heard that you were sick, but did not suppose 'twas anything like this. You are paler than a ghost!" Mrs. Brown exclaimed, as she tried to unfasten Lucy's cloak and lead her to the fire.

But Lucy was not cold, she said. She would rather go at once to Arthur's room. Mrs. Brown made no objection, though she wondered if the girl were crazy as she went back to her fowls and Christmas pudding, leaving Lucy to find her way alone to Arthur's study, which looked so like its owner, with his dressing-gown across the lounge, just where he had thrown it, his slippers under the table, and his armchair standing near the table, where he sat when he had asked Lucy to be his wife, and where she now sat down panting for breath, and gazing dreamily around with the look of a frightened bird when seeking for some avenue of escape from an appalling danger. There was no escape, and, with a moan, she laid her head upon the table and prayed that Arthur mighs come quickly, while she had courage and strength to tell him. She heard his step at last, and rose up to meet him, smiling a little at his sudden start when he saw her there.

"It's only I," she said, pushing back the clustering curls from her pale face, and, grasping the chair to steady herself and keep from falling. "I am not here to frighten you. I've come to do you good—to set you free. Oh, Arthur, you do not know how terribly you have been wronged and I did not know it, either, till a few days ago. She never received your letter—Anna never did. If she had, she would have answered yes, and have been in my place now; but she is going to be there. I give you up to Anna. I'm here to tell you so. But, oh, Arthur, it hurts so—it hurts!"

He knew that it hurt by the agonized expression of her face, but he could not go near her for a moment, so overwhelming was his surprise at what he saw and heard. But when the first shock for them bot

He held her to her promise and she must be his wife.

"Can you tell me truly that you love me more than Anna?" Lucy asked, a ray of hope dawning for an instant upon her heart, but fading into utter darkness as Arthur hesitated to answer.

He did love Anna best, though never had Lucy been so near supplanting even her as at that moment, when she stood before him and told him he was free. There was something in the magnitude of her generosity which touched a tender chord and made her dearer to him than she had ever been.

ment, when she stood belief a lim hat doth him he was free. There was something in the magnitude of her generosity which touched a tender chord and made her dearer to him than she had ever been.

"I can make you very happy," he said at last, and Lucy replied:

"Yes, but yourself—how with yourself? Would you be happy, too? No, Arthur, you would not, and neither should I, knowing all I do. It is best that we should part, though it almost breaks my heart, for I have loved you so much."

She stopped for breath, and Arthur was wondering what he could say to persuade her, when a cheery whistle sounded near and Thornton Hastings appeared in the door. He had gone to the office after church, and, not knowing that anyone but Arthur was in the library, had come there at once.

"I beg your pardon," he said when he saw Lucy, and he was hurrying away, but Lucy called him back, feeling that in him she should find a powerful ally to aid her in her task.

Appealing to him as Arthur's friend, she repeated the story rapidly, and then went on:

"Tell him that it is best—he must not argue against me, for I feel myself giving away through my great love for him, and it is not right. Say what a true woman ought to say, that it is my duty to give him up. Tell him so, Mr. Hastings—plead my cause for me—say, for, believe me, I am in earnest in giving him to Anna."

There was a ghastly hue on her face, and her features looked pinched and rigid, but the terrible heart-beats were not there. God, in his great mercy kept them back, else she had surely died under that strong excitement. Thornton thought that she was fainting, and going hastily to her side, passed his arm around her and put her in a chair; then, standing protectingly by her, he said just what first came to his mind to say. It was a delicate matter in which to interfere, and he handled it carefully, telling frankly of what had passed between himself and Anna, and giving as his opinion that she loved Arthur today just as well as before she had left Hanover.

"There was something room.

"I am willing—I am ready—I have made up my mind, and I shall never revoke it," she answered, while Arthur again put in a feeble remonstrance. But Thornton was on Lucy's side. He did with cooler judgment what she could not, and when, at last, the interview was ended, there was no ring on Lucy's finger, for Arthur had it in his hand, and their engagement was at a nor did.

Lucy's finger, for Arthur had it in his hand, and their engagement was at an end.

Stunned with what he had passed through, Arthur stood motionless, while Thornton drew Lucy's cloak about her shoulders, fastened her fur himself, taking such care of her as a mother would take of a suffering child.

"It is hardly safe to send her home alone," he thought, as he looked into her face and saw how weak she was. "As a friend of both I ought to accompany her."

She was, indeed, very weak, so weak that she company her."

She was, indeed, very weak, so weak that she could scarcely stand, and Thornton took her in his arms and carried her to the sleigh; then, springing in beside her, he made her lean her tired head upon his shoulder, as they drove to Prospect Hill. She did not seem frivolous to him now, but, rather, the noblest type of womanhood he had ever met. Few could do what she had done, and there was much of warmth and fervor in the clasp of his hand, as he bade her good by and went back to the rectory, thinking how deceived he had been in Lucy Harcourt.

Great was the consternation and surprise in Hanover when it was known that there was to be but one bride at Prospect Hill on the night of the fifteenth, and various were the surmises as to the causes of the sudden change; but, strive as they might, the good people of the village could not get at the truth, for Valencia held her peace, while the Hethertons were far too proud to admit of being questioned, and Thornton Hastings stood a bulwark of defence between the people and their clergyman, adroitly managing to have the pulpit of St. Mark's supplied for a few weeks while he took Arthur away, saying that his health required the change.

"You have done nobly, darling," Fanny Hetherton had said to Lucy, when she received her from Thornton's hands and heard that all was over; 元公平公(平本3公(平)金) then, leading her half-fainting cousin to her own cheerful room, she made her lie down while she told of the plan that she had formed when first she heard what Lucy's intention were.

"I wrote to the doctor, asking if he would take a trip to Europe, so that you could go with us, for I knew that you would not want to stay here. Today I had his answer, saying that he will go, and what is better still, father and mother are going too."

what is better still, father and mother are going too."

"Oh, I am so glad, so glad. I could not stay here now," Lucy replied, sobbing herself to sleep, while Fanny sat by and watched, wondering at the strength which had upheld her weak little cousin in the struggle she had been through, and now that it was over and the doctor safe from temptation, feeling that it was just as well; for, after all, it was a mesalliance for an heiress like her cousin to marry a poor clergy man.

reeling that it was just as well; for, after all, it was a mesalliance for an heiress like her cousin to marry a poor clergyman.

There was a very quiet wedding at Prospect Hill on the night of the fifteenth, but neither Lucy nor Arthur were there. He lay sick again at the St. Denis in New York, and she was alone in her chamber, fighting back her tears and praying that, now the worst was over, she might be withheld from looking back and wishing the work undone. She went with the bridal party to New York, where she tarried for a few days, seeing no one but Anna, for whom she had sent at once. The interview had lasted more than an hour, and Anna's eyes were swollen with passionate weeping when at last it ended, but Lucy's face, though white as snow, was very calm and quiet, wearing a peaceful look, which made it look like an angel's face. Two weeks later, and the steamer bore her away across the ocean, where she hoped to outlive the storm which had beaten so piteously upon her. Thornton Hastings and Anna went with her on board the ship, and for their sakes she tried to appear natural, succeeding so well that it was a very jeasant picture which Thornton cherished in his mind of a frail, little figure standing upon the deck, waving a smilling good by to Anna and himself.

More than a year after, Thornton Hastings followed that figure across the sea, finding it in beautiful Venice, sailing again through the monlit streets and listening to the music which came so oft from the passing gondolas. Her form had recovered its former roundness and the face was even more beautiful than it had ever been before, for the light frivolity was all gone and there was reigning in its stead a peaceful, subdued expression which made Lucy Harcourt very fair to look upon. At least so thought Thornton Hastings and he lingered at her side, feeling glad that she had given no outward token of agitation when he said to her:

"There was a wedding in Hanover at St. Mark's, jost before I left. Can you guess who the happy couple were?"

Then she

this, his second wooling, was more successful than his first.

"Married in Rome, on Thursday, April 10th, Thornton Hastings, Esq. of New York, and niece of Colonel James Hetherton."

Anna was out in the rectory garden, bending over a bed of hyacinths when Arthur brought her the paper and pointed to the notice.

"Oh, I am so glad—so glad—so glad!" she exclaimed, emphasizing each successive "glad" a little more, and setting down her foot as if to give it force. "I have never dared to be quite happy with you as I might," she continued, leaning lovingly against her husband, "for there was always a thought of Lucy and what a fearful price she paid for our happiness. But now it is all as it should be; and Arthur, am I very vain in thinking that she is better suited to Thornton Hastings than I ever was, and that I do better as your wife than Lucy would have done?"

A kiss was Arthur's only answer, but Anna was satisfied, and thererested upon her face a look of perfect content as all that warm spring afternoon she worked in her pleasant garden, thinking of the newly married pair in Rome, and glancing occasionally at the open window of the library where Arthur was busy with his sermon, his pen moving all the faster for the knowing that Anna was just within his call—that by turning his head he could see her dear face, and that, by and by, when his work was done, she would come into him and, with loving words and winsome ways, make him forget how tired he was and thank heaven again for the great gift bestowed when it gave him Anna Ruthven.

HAVE YOU WEAK LUNGS

Do you spit yellow and black matter? Are you continually coughing and hawking, losing flesh, have night sweats, bleeding from the lungs, fever and chills, weak voice, flat chest and pains in sides and under shoulder blades?

These were the exact symptoms present in the case of Mr. Wm. Schmidt, 1904 Coleman Street, St. Louis, Mo. (whose picture is here reproduced). This man was treated by the best St. Louis doctors, all of whom pronounced him in an incurable stage of Consumption (Tuberculosis). After getting no encouragement from the physicians, he was taken to a prominent hospital and, after a thorough examinamost entirely decomposed, that his was a hopeless case of consumption, and that all medical treatment would be of no avail. After receiving all of this discouraging information, Mr. Schmidt saw Lung-Germine advertised, and without a moment's delay he ordered the treatment and began its use. The result was that we was made a well man after six months of Lung-Germine treatment had been used. This cure was established three years ago and he remains a strong and healthy man to this day, with absolutely no trace of the dread disease in his system.

-LUNG-GERMINE THE GERMAN TREATMENT FOR CONSUMPTION

has cured hundreds of cases just as serious as Mr. Schmidt's. If you have any of the above named symptoms we hope that you will regard them as a danger signal and the warning of Nature. Do not allow your condition to become more serious and deep seated. Satisfy yourself as to the correctness of our claims for Lung Germine, and place yourself under this peatment at once. Every day you delay means another forward stride of this desperate malady. Lung-Germine treatment can be used, with all the benefits which it gives, in your own home.

IT IS NOT NECESSARY TO LEAVE YOUR HOME friends or business, and enter a sanitarium or go to a different climate. We shall be glad to send you full particulars and sample of the remedy absolutely free. Write us today and learn more about this successful treatment for Consumption.

Anna, Ahloso, I. T.—There is no categorical answer to your question. There is an answer to every varying condition of climate and market and location, and all are different. For families who are meat eaters, vegetables are not economical, and vice versa. You will have to work the problem out in your own locality.

Old Coins, Braddock, Pa.—You will have to consult experts. Write to Capen Crawford, 116 Nassau St., New York, or to W. P. Brown, 213 Broadway. And write very much more distinctly than in your letter to us. You write well enough, but you try to get too much on one sheet.

E. F. S., Charleston, Ill.—We can not give you an address of Mr. Carnegie to which a letter might be sent and receive an answer. He does not answer letters and you are wasting money and time writing to him.

How to Hear Plants Grow

If you were told that it was possible to hear plants grow you would scarcely believe it, but two Germans say they have discovered a method of "hearing" plants grow. In the apparatus the growing plant is connected with a disc, having in its center an indicator which moves visibly and regularly, and this, on a scale fifty times magnified, denotes the progress in growth. Both disc and indicator are metal, and when brought in contact with an electric hammer, the electric current being interrupted at each of the divided interstices of the disc, the growth of the plant is as perceptible to ear as to the eye.

That Will Hold Fifty Cards.

Our fifty-card Album is the most attractive on the market. On each page two cards may be displayed; the leaves are very heavy rigid paper stock of a heavy green shade, providing a very tasty and attractive background for all cards, and when two pages are opened together showing four cards, the appearance is extremely attractive, and one cannot neatly preserve a collection of Post Cards unless they are displayed in an Album. And better still, a very nice collection of Souvenir Postal Cards represents the individual and personal thought of absent or distant relatives and friends and they are very entertaining for visitors who enjoy looking them over; so, that in an Album, arranged in order, they are readily accessible and may be examined time after time with no harm to the Cards, and thus preserved in remembrance of the senders. No one thinks of collecting Souvenir Cards without an Album. Everyone wants an Album and the demand, just now, exceeds the supply. We are fortunate in having a great quantity on hand of first-class Albums which we are to distribute as premiums to those who will send us clubs of subscribers to this magazine as per our offer below.

Let me tell you FREE what the future has in store for you, whether the coming years hold out riches that you could grasp, if you but knew it, whether marriage and a happy home may be your blessing and whether Fame will knock at your door. The stars will tell it all.

Let me show you how to take advantage of the good fortune that is ready to help you if you knew when and how to act; let me point out the pitfalls and swamps of failure that are in your path, and tell you clearly how to avoid them. GOLD WATCH FREE

Conducted by Cousin Marion

In order that each cousin may be answered in this column, no cousin must ask more than three questions in one month.

FEBRUARY greeting to you all, dear cousins, and a wish that the New Year is keeping pace with its promises. Everything is new yet, and the resolutions you made a month ago are nice and fresh. But as the months go by they will begin to grow stale, and then is the time when you must take a new hold, and pull yourselves out of the old ways into which it is so easy to fall. But we mustn't talk too much. Work is to be done, and now is the time to do it.

The first letter in the pile before me is from Blue-and now is the time to do it.

The first letter in the pile before me is from Blueeyed Elsie of Spokane, Wash., who wants to know if she is too young, not quite seventeen, to have the company of young men. If she is out of school, and her books are laid by, she is supposed to be ready to enter upon the course which leads to marriage and settlement in her own home. But really, now, cousins, do you think a child of sixteen is old enough to undertake so great a responsibility? Shouldn't she think about something else for a while, say until she is twenty at least, and prepare herself properly to be the right kind of a woman to care for a home and family? It is well enough for her to meet and know the right kind of young men, and enjoy society to a certain extent, but only as means to an end. P.S. Her other question is answered in Manners and Looks column.

Dutch, Greentown, Ind.—Ask the young man to Dutch, Greentown, Ind.—Ask the young man to call on you. That is quite permissible. But do not show him any especial preference until he shows some for you. Be nice to him, that's enough.

Blue Eyes, Pine Bluff, Ark.—There is no love in it. Telephone to him, and ask him about what you have heard he was saying, and why did he say it. The rest of it will be easy enough.

Rosy Cheek, Cad, Ark.—If he thinks very much of you and is so anxious to call, as he says he is, he must be "jollying," or he would call. As long as he does not, you may believe that he does not mean what he says.

A. K. C., Kerrville, Texas.—When the girl is so poor that she can not provide her own wedding outfit, it is better to marry in her old clothes than to let the groom buy them. Of course, if you want him to buy an outfit for you, there is no law against it. (2) The girl may help the man put on his overcoat if she wants to. He will always want her to. (3) The afternoon call is quite allowable under the circumstances. her to. (3) The afternoon under the circumstances.

Sweetheart, Chewelah, Wash.—Since you do not care especially for any one of the dozen beaus around you, give each one a chance, and you will always have company, and keep them all guessing.
(2) Choose the one that you like best. He will make you miserable all your life, but you will be happier miserable, than if you had the one you didn't like. That's women's way. (3) A flirt is a kind of a girl no honorable girl should be, or can be.

Blue Lily, Boston, Mass.—Nineteen is not too old for you to wait a little longer for the young man to propose. If you should get a better chance, in the mean time, you will not be sorry that you waited.

Mary and Hope, Havensville, Kans.—Yes, the girl in the High School is too young to have a beau. Any girl in school, of any age, is. An engagement should not extend beyond six months. Less is better, when the two know each other well.

Anxious Anna, Onalaska, Wis.—You must have queer sort of parents if they want you to go with a young man such as you describe. As you seem to understand what he is, why don't you refuse to have anything more to do with him? That is all you can do.

Deserted, Richmond, Va.—Your letter was answered. But as I have said over and over again in this column, letters can not be answered promptly in print. It is often that a letter received, say in December, is not answered before February. You must not forget that thousands of letters come to Comport every day, and it sometimes takes weeks to sort them out and place them in their proper departments.

Geotrapie Beardstown III As leave the source of t

Gertrude, Beardstown, Ill.—As long as your parents do not object, you need not give it any thought.

Dearest, Brooklyn, N. Y.—Both of you are at fault. He seems to be a sensible sort of young man, and you seem to be a sensible girl. Why don't both of you use the sense you have and talk your troubles over? That is the only way to get at them and to settle them definitely. You are acting like children now, and very silly children, if I may be allowed to speak frankly. A sensible talk of half an hour would clear the whole sky and put you both in fair understanding of each other. Unless you do settle it by "getting together," as the slang is, both of you will be playing a losing game.

Puzzled Lily, Dietz, Wyo.—Your parents are is, both of you will be playing a losing game.

Puzzled Lily, Dietz, Wyo.—Your parents are right. You should marry the young man or drop him, unless there is some reason why you should wait. When a man tells a girl he loves her and she loves him, it is for them to marry. Sometimes there are reasons why an immediate marriage is not possible, but when there is no such reason, and the young man simply dawdles along making love to the girl, he should be dropped right away.

Ignoramus, Lexington, Va.—That was merely a bit of slang, and meant no harm, but it was not what a polished gentleman should say to a lady in asking if he might call. It is quite proper for you to ask anyone to call, provided your parents consent. Still. a seventeen-year-old girl should not have too many callers.

Blue Bell, Beloit, Wis.—It means that the young man is silly and thinks you are as silly as he is.

Are you?

Illinois Orphan, Elgin, Ill.—Bonbons and such souvenirs are recognized as permissible presents, and you can only refuse them at risk of hurting the young man's feelings. You might tell him that your parents did not like for you to accept presents of any kind except from old friends. If he is the right kind, he will understand and stop. If he isn't, then you send them back to him when he offers them. He'll understand that, probably.

Baby, Khedive, Pa.—Girls of fifteen should go to school and not to parties. Ask your mother about your dresses and colors.

Innocence, Middleborough, N. Y.—A sofa pillow makes a very nice present for a young man. (2) It is all right to go out with your cousin's husband if she does not object. (3) She should say nothing, but she should be careful never to let the man take her by the hand again. Married men have no right to squeeze girls' hands.

There, dears, your questions are answered and I have done the best I could to put you on the straight road to happiness. May we all reach the goal and with good cheer greet each other and rejoice. By, by, now, until we meet again.

Cousin Marion.

Teacher Found Dead

Center Street Grammar School, in Richmond, last Thursday morning had the awful experience of finding their teacher, Miss Ina B. Reed, lying dead by her desk in the schoolroom. The coroner's physician, Dr. Jerome, at once pronounced it "sudden death from Heart Disease."
Mrs. Reed, the mother, said: "Several times during the last term of school Ina has mentioned that it put her out of breath to hurry any, and that her heart had spells of acting queer, but every time that I would urge her to do something for it she would only laugh me off and say, 'Oh, it's nothing but a little palpitation—it's my stomach, I guess—it will get well of itself anyway.' But I know she hurried to get to school a little earlier than usual this morning and it has cost us her precious, young life."

This case is only one; sixty thousand people die yearly of Heart Disease! Six in every ten have it. Many don't know it, they think it's something else and doctor the stomach.

ten have it. Many don't know it, they think it's something else and doctor the stomach, kidneys, female organs, etc., and get no better; and a good many who do know think it can't be cured. Now Heart Disease is just as curable as any other disease; we have proved this fully by curing over a hundred and thirty thousand cases! Many of these were the most chronic, serious, complicated kind, in which all other remedies and doctors had failed, and hope seemed gone, but our treatment cured them quickly and to stay cured! In very many cases of Heart Disease the Nerves and Stomach are affected also, and in such it is useless to treat the heart alone, and such it is useless to treat the heart alone, and one reason why our treatment cures is be-cause it sets the stomach right, removes con-

"Virtue itself offends when coupled with forbid-ding manners"—Bishop Middleton.

In order to meet the demand for information made by COMFORT readers on the kindred subjects of Etiquette and Personal Appearance, this column will be devoted to them, and all questions will be answered but no inquirer shall ask more than two questions each month. We would suggest to readers to cut this column out and paste it in a scrap book. Address letters to Etiquette Editor, COMFORT, Augusta Maine.

Spitfire, Kerrville. Texas.—Ordinarily, it is better for the man to take the outside of the sidewalk when walking with a lady. (2) The hours for evening driving are according to the custom of the locality. We believe from seven thirty to ten or ten thirty, is most generally observed. That sort of driving is not known at all in the larger cities. (3) Engaged girls should not correspond with other men except with the consent of their fiances.

M. L. N. H., Spartansburg, Pa.—We believe the remedy requires from four to six months to produce results. (2) Only an operation will bring wide extended ears close to the head.

Honey Sweet, Bolla, Mo.—The nights are proper extended ears close to the head.

Honey Sweet, Rolla, Mo.—The nights are proper for a gentleman to call, whenever the young lady wants him to call. It may be Sunday and Thursday, or Sunday and Wednesday, or Sunday and every other night. There is no rule for that sort of calling. Ordinary calls are not made oftener than once a week, or two weeks, depending upon the friendliness and congeniality of the parties at interest. (2) If your parents do not object you may go buggy riding."

H. W. S. Glanvilla, Pr. Having and Property of the parties at interest.

H. W. S., Glenville, Pa.—Having met the lady once, another introduction is not necessary. Write a note to her—don't telephone—recalling the time when you met her and ask if you may call. People may be introduced any number of times. If they do not forget each other after the first, though they may not meet in fifty years, another introduction is not necessary.

Elsie, Spokane, Wash.—The man leads the way into church, unless it is in the lady's own church, and she knows best where her pew is. She always precedes him into the pew.

Olive, Wayne, Mich.—Don't dress too much like a small girl. Girls of sixteen are very nearly women as far as size is concerned and the way they look on the street. Dress as other girls of your age do.

Edna, Mabel, and Peggie, Thayer, Mo.—Submit your three questions to the postmaster of your town. He will be able to give you valuable information on the subjects you present. He knows all about the mails.

Constant Reader, Canton, N. Y.—A card with "Regrets" written on it in any corner is a style of declination of an invitation to any affair which is little short of a snub. Write the word anywhere if you intend a snub, and if you do not then write a note of regret. It is proper to send your regrets to any written invitation which you can not accept.

Ignoramus, Lexington, Va.—If he will not answer your letter when you have answered his and let him know you want to hear from him, it is very evident that he does not want to correspond with you, and there is nothing for you to do but to give him up, even if it does hurt you. He does not want you, and you should not want him. (2) The expression is only some boyish slang, and you would do better not to try to reply to it. We have never heard the expression, and it does not seem to mean anything.

buttercup, Nance, N. C.—If the man is a proper person to write to, we suppose it would be proper to answer a note written by him in a schoolroom. Why did you think it would not? (2) The man who has the lady's permission to go home with her should resent the other man coming up and taking her arm. Indeeed, we do not understand how a man would do such a thing unless he were drunk or intending to insult the escort of the lady. She has nothing to say except to tell the other man that she has an escort. What we have said does not always apply when all the parties are on very friendly terms, and such an obtrusion would not be considered more than good-natured roystering carried somewhat too far.

Brown Eyes, Watsonville, Cal.—The usual depilatory is composed of orpiment, one part; starch and quicklime, each ten parts. Powder the orpiment thoroughly, and mix with the others into a paste just before using. Apply, and let remain for four or five minutes. Remove with a blunt knife. Bathe and apply cold cream. If the skin is broken, be very careful how you use this or you will have a sore and perhaps disfigured face. Really, the safest depilatory is a good sharp razor and plenty of lather.

Bashfulness, Nonamia, Mo.—Tell him she will be very glad to go with him, or to have him go with her. Tell him she is very sorry, but she can not, when she must decline. There is no set rule for these things, and one must say whatever is pleasantest, either in accepting or declining. Requests to be excused are not replied to always, but when they are, "Certainly," is enough to say. There is no rule governing here-either. There could not be because conditions vary so.

A. J. M., Boston, Mass.-You are all right, and if A. J. M., Boston, Mass.—You are all right, and if by any chance the girl doesn't choose you, she will be losing a good thing. Still, you never can tell what women will do. We are inclined to think that you will win out in good shape, and you ought to. You certainly have our best wishes. Don't be of too faint heart, but go forward. Not too fast, but with firmness and gentleness. But manage to see her oftener than you have been doing. She has too many chances to meet other men.

A Record Breaker.

It is said that the greatest and quickest permanent advertising success on record is that of Cascarets, Candy Cathartic, which have been persistently advertised in every way, but chiefly in newspapers for about six years. In that time the sale of Cascarets has grown from nothing to over one million boxes a month. This wonderful record is the result of great merit successfully made known. Those who tried Cascarets as a direct result of advertising. tried Cascarets as a direct result of advertising, were pleased and recommended the articles to their friends until its fame was spread to become universal.

By special request from many of our readers we print the words of a few songs and will continue to do so each month as space allows. We invite, our readers to send in the words of popular old songs which they think would please our six millions of readers. My Trundle Bed

As I rummag'd thro' the attic,
List'ning to the falling rain,
As it patter'd on the shingles,
And against the window pane;
Peeping over chests and boxes,
Which with dust were thickly spread;
Saw I in the farthest corner
What was once my trundle bed.

So I drew it from the recess, so I drew it from the recess,
Where it had remained so long,
Hearing all the while the music
Of my mother's voice in song;
As she sung in sweetest accents
What I since have often read—
Hush, my dear, lie still and slumber,
Holy angels guard thy bed.

As I listen'd, recollections,
That I thought had been forgot,
Came with all the gush of mem'ry, Rushing, thronging to the spot;
And I wandered back to childhood,
To those merry days of yore,
When I knelt beside my mother,
By this bed upon the floor.

Then it was with hands so gently, Placed upon my infant head,
That she taught my lips to utter,
Carefully the words she said;
Never can they be forgotten,
Deep are they in mem'ry riven—
Hallowed be thy name, "O Father!
Father! thou who art in Heaven."

This she taught me, then she told me,
Of its import, great and deep,
After which I learned to utter,
"Now I lay me down to sleep;"
Then it was with hands uplifted,
And in accents soft and mild,
That my mother asked, "Our Father!
Father! do thou bless my child!"

Years have pass'd, and that dear mother
Long has moulder'd 'neath the sod,
And I trust her sainted spirit,
Revels in the home of God;
But that scene at summer twilight,
Never has from mem'ry fled,
And it comes in all its freshness,
When I see my trundle bed.

"Miss Earl, what I am about to say will perhaps seem premature, and will doubtless surprise you; but I beg you to believe that it is the result of mature deliberation—"

He paused and looked earnestly at her. "You certainly have not decided to give up the editorship of 'Maga,' as you spoke of doing last winter? It would not survive your desertion six months."

"My allusion was to yourself, not to the magazine, which I presume I shall edit as long as I live. Miss Earl, this state of affairs cannot continue. You have no regard for your health, which is suffering materially, and you are destroying yourself. You must let me take care of you, and save you from the ceaseless toil in which you are rapidly and you are destroying yourself. You must let me take care of you, and save you do, all day, and then sit up nearly all night to write, would exhaust a constitution of steel or brass. You are probably not aware of the great change which has taken place m you appearance during the last three months. Hitherto circumstances may have left you no alternative, but one is now offered you. My property is sufficient to render you comfortable. I have already purchased a pleasant home, to which I shall remove next week, and I want you to share it with me—to share my future—all that I have. You have known me scarcely a year, but you are not a stranger to my character or position, and I think that you repose implicit confidence in me. Notwithstanding the unfortunate disparity in our years, I believe we are becoming mutually dependent on each other, and in your society I find a charm such as no other human being possesses; though I have no right to expect that a girl of your age can derive equal pleasure from the companionship of a man old enough to be her father. I am not demonstrative, but my feelings are the institution of my liftle Lila. She was but six month

So entirely unexpected was this proposal that Edna could not utter a word. The idea that he could ever wish to marry anybody seemed incredible, and that he should need her society appeared utterly absurd. For an instant she wondered if she had fallen asleep in the soft, luxurious corner of the carriage, and dreamed it all.

Completely bewildered, she sat looking wonderingly at him.

"Miss Earl, you do not seem to comprehend me, and yet my words are certainly very explicit. Once more I ask you, can you put your hand in mine and be my wife?"

He laid one hand on hers, and with the other pushed back his glasses.

Withdrawing her hands, she covered her face with them, and answered almost inaudibly:

"Let me think—for you astonish me."

"Take a day, or a week, if necessary, for consideration, and then give me your answer."

Mr. Manning leaned back in the carriage,

Mr. Manning leaned back in the carriage, folded his hands, and looked quietly out of the window; and for a half hour silence folded his hands, and looked quietly out of the window; and for a half hour silence reigned.

Brief but sharp was the struggle in Edna's heart. Probably no woman's literary vanity and ambition has ever been more fully gratified than was hers, by this most unexpected offer of marriage from one whom she had been taught to regard as the noblest ornament of the profession she had selected. Thinking of the hour when she sat alone, shedding tears of mortification and bitter disappointment over his curt letter rejecting her MS, she glanced at the stately form beside her, the mysteriously calm, commanding face, the large white, finely moulded hands, waiting to clasp hers for all time, and her triumph seemed complete.

To rule the destiny of that strong man, whose intellect was so influential in the world of letters, was a conquest of which, until this hour, she had never dreamed; and the blacksmith's darling was, after all, a mere woman, and the honor dazzled her.

To one of her peculiar temperament wealth offered no temptation; but Douglass Manning had climbed to a grand eminence, and, looking up at it, she knew that any woman might well be proud to share it.

He filled her ideal, he came fully up to her lofty moral and mental standard. She knew that his superior she could never hope to meet, and her confidence in his integrity of character was boundless.

neither the right to expect nor the presumption to dream of. My reverence and admiration are, I confess, almost boundless, but I find not one atom of love; and an examination of my feelings satisfies me that I could never yield you that homage of heart, that devoted affection which God demands that every wife should pay her husband. You have quite as little love for me. We enjoy each other's society because our pursuits are similar, our tastes congenial, our aspirations identical. In pleasant and profitable companionship we can certainly indulge as heretofore, and it would greatly pain me to be deprived of it in future; but this can be ours without the sinful mockery of a marriage—for such I hold a loveless union. I feel that I must have your esteem and your society, but your love I neither desire nor ever expect to possess; for the sentiments you cherish for me are precisely similar to those which I entertain toward you. Mr. Manning, we shall always be firm friends, but nothing more."

An expression of surprise and disappointment diffed eacher.

shall always be firm friends, but nothing more."

An expression of surprise and disappointment drifted across, but did not settle on the editor's quiet countenance.

Turning to her, he answered with grave gentleness:

"Judge your own heart, Edna; and accept my verdict with reference to mine. Do you suppose that after living single all these years I would ultimately marry a woman for whom I had no affection? You spoke last week of the mirror of John Galeazzo Visconte, which showed his beloved Correggia her own image; and though I am a proua and reticent man, I beg you to believe that could you look into my heart you would find it such a mirror. Permit me to ask whether you intend to accept the love which I have reason to believe Mr. Murray has offered you?"

reason to believe Mr. Murray has offered you?"

"Mr. Manning, I never expect to marry any one, for I know I shall never meet your superior, and yet I cannot accept your most flattering offer. You fill all my requirements of noble, Christian manhood; but after today this subject must not be alluded 'to."

"Are you not too hasty? Will you not take more time for reflection? Is your decision mature and final?"

"Yes, Mr. Manning—final, unchangeable. But do not throw me from you! I am very, very lonely, and you surely will not forsake me?"

There were tears in her eyes as she looked up pleadingly in his face, and the editor

"ST. ELMO" IN BOOK FORM and COMFORT One Year Only 65 c.

She felt that his society had become necessary to her peace of mind; for only in his presence was it possible to forget her past. Either she must marry him, or live snigle, and work and die—alone.

To a girl of nineteen the latter alternative seems more appalling than to a woman of thirty, whose eyes have grown strong in the gray, cold, sunless light of confirmed old-maidenhood; even as the vision of those who live in dim caverns requires not the lamps needed by newcomers fresh from the dazzling outer world.

Edna was weary of battling with precious memories of that reckless, fascinating cynic whom, without trusting, she had learned to love; and she thought that, perhaps, if she were the wife of Mr. Manning, whom without loving she fully trusted, it would help her to forget St. Elmo.

She did not deceive herself; she knew that, despite her struggles and stern interdicts, she loved him as she could never hope to love any one else. Impatiently she said to herself:

"Mr. Murray is as old as Mr. Manning, and in the estimation of the public is his inferior. Oh! why cannot my weak, wayward heart follow my strong, clear-eyed judgment? I would give ten years of my life to love Mr. Manning as I love—"

She compared a swarthy, electrical face, scowling and often repulsively harsh, with one cloudless and noble, over which brooded a solemn and perpetual peace; and she almost groaned aloud in her chagrin and self-contempt, as she thought, "Surely, if ever a woman was infatuated—possessed by an evil spirit—I certainly am."

While she sat there wrestling as she had never done before, even on that day of trial in the church, memory, as if leagued with Satan, brought up the image of Mr. Murray as he stood pleading for himself, for his future. She heard once more his thrilling, passionate cry, "Oh, my darling! my darling! come to me!" And pressing her face to the lining of the carriage to stifle a groan, she seemed to feel again the close clasp of his arms, the throbbing of his heart against her cheek, the warm, tender, lingerin hollowness in her voice as she sale annows sorrowfully:

"No, Mr. Manning! We do not love each other, and I can never be your wife. It is useless for me to assure you that I am flattered by your preference; that I am inexpressibly proud of the distinction you have generously offered to confer upon me. Sir, you cannot doubt that I do most fully and gratefully appreciate this honor, which I had sighed and paused a moment before he replied:

"Edna, if under any circumstances you feel that I can aid or advise you, I shall be exceedingly glad to render all the assistance in my power. Rest assured I shall not forsake you as long as we both shall live. Call upon me without hesitation, and I will respond as readily and promptly as to the claims of my little Lila. In my heart you are associated with her. You must not tax yourself so unremittingly, or you will soon ruin your constitution. There is a weariness in your face and a languor in your manner mournfully prophetic of failing health. Either give up your situation as governess or abandon your writing. I certainly recommend the former, as I cannot spare you from "Maga."

Here the carriage stopped at Mrs. Andrews' door, and as he handed her out Mr. Manning said:

"Edna, my friend, promise me that you will not write tonight."

"Thank you, Mr. Manning; I promise."

She did not go to her desk; but Felix was restless, feverish, querulous, and it was after midnight when she laid her head on her pillow. The milkmen in their noisy carts were clattering along the streets next morning, before her heavy eyelids closed, and she fell into a brief, troubled slumber; over which flitted a Fata Morgana of dreams, where the central figure was always that tall one whom she had seen last standing at the railroad station with the rain dripping over him.

EE this dear old lady, worn and bent, with colorless lips, sunken in the chest, a victim probably of consumption; her joints stiff and crooked, because her system is charged with rheumatism. OXIEN, if taken in time, could have saved her from all this and made her a strong, well woman. Even now, with the aid of OXIEN, she could bring the color back to her cheeks and pains that are making life almost unbearable, patient even as she is. OXIEN is the OLD FOLKS' REMEDY. We know of hundreds, yes, thousands of cases, where elderly people have started on OXIEN remedies and have killed the germs of consumption, driven out every particle of rheumatism from their system, cured indigestion and lung complaints and been given rich, red blood and new life and vitality. It is never too late. (See Mrs. Cooper's Photo below). OXIEN helps many old people the same as it has Mr: Philip Knee of Shaw, Pa., who writes that he was 75 years old last December, and cured himself of Lame Back and other serious troubles by the use of OXIEN Remedies. OXIEN is also good for the young, as the same Mr. Knee writes that his grandson, a young man 20 years of age, was also cured of serious troubles by applying the OXIEN Plasters; and that he himself now works like a young man, owing to taking OXIEN, Mrs. Mollie Nelson of Baum, Indian Territory, says she was a perfect wreck in body and mind from La Grippe and Fever. The doctor, whom she quit three years ago, had given her no relief, but since she began taking OXIEN Remedies she has not been in bed aday or taken a dose of doctor's medicine. She does all of her own housework, and, thanks to OXIEN, can hoe and pick cotton as well as a young person.

Eighty-year-old J. J. Crockett of Marrowbone, Tenn., says OXIEN Remedies have done him so much good he cannot praise them enough; and Malise Crenshaw, Howe, Indian Territory, who is 59 years old, was so afflicted before taking OXIEN she cannot fully explain her deplorable condition. Catarrh of the head and lungs interfered with the working of her mind. She had torpid liver and kidney trouble and was so nervous she could hardly talk. After taking four boxes of OXIEN and two bottles of OXIEN Pills and Salve, she was so wonderfully improved that she is now able to run a large hotel, doing all her own work, and is a strong woman today. Mrs. Lou Lizerbee, Sikeston, Mo., is 46 years of age, and has a large family, but her nerves and stomach trouble of two years ago got the best of her. She could find no remedies to do any good until she used OXIEN. Today she writes that she is as strong as ever, and can do as much work as anyone, Mrs. Mason Brown, Riverton, N. J., is 70 years old, but says she feels very young since using OXIEN Plasters. She had pains in her back and also cured the severe colds on her lungs. H. T. Johnson says his poor, old mother suffered untold ageny with Rheumatism for many years. She was so weak she could hardly do her work. After using two boxes of OXIEN, she now feels strong and well. Although 86 years of age, R. W. Condley, Tag., Ark., says he is now as well as any man of his age could be. After suffering several years without finding help, OXIEN Remedies immediately cured him, He could not sleep and could only lie on one side and cough. He now rests comfortably at night, thanks to OXIEN. Miss Ida Johnson, King, N. C., says her father, who is now 71 years old, had Pneumonia and LaGrippe, leaving him with a weak heart. He had night sweats and could not sleep, but after using OXIEN and OXIEN Plasters he feels completely well.

OXIEN is wholly original and unlike anything ever offered to the public. Its effects are original, and unlike the effects of anything else. It will give new strength, new life and new hope after everything else has failed. It is the only real Food for the Nerves ever discovered, and one trial will prove the truth of this. It contains a subtle something that cures. OXIEN differs from every other discoverery in medicine as yellow gold differs from gray, lustreless lead, and its effects differ from the effects of other so-called foods and medicines as gold under a written energy excites the energy excited the energy excites the energy excited energy excite

THE ABOVE IS THE PORTRAIT OF MRS. A. .F COOPER. 73 YEARS OLD.

THE GIANT OXIE CO., Augusta, Maine.

Gentlemen:—I am sending you my photograph, and, although 73 years old, thanks to OXIEN I feel like a young woman.

Nearly 15 years ago, in 1891 or '92, my attention was called to an advertisement of OXIEN in one of the papers. As I had just been attacked by a severe case of La Grippe, I sent for a sample, and it helped me, and also my husband and daughter almost like maglo. I have not had attendance from a physician for all these years; and when I feel III, I send for a supply of the GIANT OXIEN, which is all the doctor I need. Racine has a cold, wet, changeable climate, and people always have had colds here, and I cannot speak too highly of your great medicine. OXIEN, which not only keeps me well and free from all ills, but my husband, too, who is also 73 years old. His friends in the shop all say they have been greatly helped by the OXIEN Remedies. Wishing you great prosperity, I remain, your friend. MRS. A. F. COOPER, IS30 Packard Ave.

OXIEM Remedies. Wishing you great prosperity. I remain, your friend.

That OXIEM is as good for the young as it is for the old, there can be no possible doubt. Thousands of letters are received giving testimonies about people of all ages, from two months to ninety years old.

Martha L. Kayses of Cottage Grove, Oregon, writes that she gave OXIEN to one child that had been affected from birth with muscle and nervous troubles. It was never able to walk a step until he used OXIEN. Mollie Marsh of Clifton, Ark., says her baby is only two months old and she gives her OXIEN, and she is getting to be a fine, strong girl. Mrs. Barney Philpott, Guston, Ky., says her boy was ruptured when three years old. Doctors said he would always have to wear a truss, but by using OXIEN and OXIEN and OXIEN leads the rupture and is now ten years old, sound and well. Mrs. Chas. Mrs. Laura O Quinn, Jumb Mines, India Veryon years, and so OXIEN had to of OXIEN needles in his family for many years, and sold them to others. They all derive great benefit from their use. A. H., Augusta, Ky.—As catarrh is so much a result of climatic conditions the only real cure for it is a climate where it does not exist. That you will find in the cold, dry air of Colorado, or the hot, dry air of Arizona. Dryness of air is what is needed. Medicine may relieve it somewhat, but with bad weather it is pretty sure to come again, and the Ohio river valley has plenty of it in the fogs that visit you so frequently.

J. D., Cooley, Okla.—Just what causes the bad odor of perspiration we will not undertake to say. You can get at any drug store very good preparations which will kill the odor. These are specially prepared and are more or less expensive. A very simple disinfectant is a few drops of ammonia in the water you wash with.

W. D. J., Columbia, S. C.—We do not recall the

w. D. J., Columbia, S. C.—We do not recall the advice. We think it much wiser for you to consult a physician than to take newspaper advice in a matter which is of so much importance for the future. Now is the time if ever, when personal advice is of the greatest importance.

vice is of the greatest importance.

A., Lorraine, Miss.—The trouble is either bronchial, or the result of the palate coming down until it tickles the throat and causes the cough. Have you ever asked a physician to examine for this cause? If not, you should do so, for a simple operation would relieve it almost at once. As you give the symptoms we are rather inclined to think that this is the cause? On the other hand bronchial trouble is very stubborn, and sometimes will not yield entirely to the best treatment. No better remedy can be had for it than inhalation. But look after the other first.

E. G., Rockwell, Iowa.—Not at this distance. Better let some near-by physician have a look at it.

L. H., South Otselia, N. Y.—No simple news-

L. H., South Otselia, N. Y.—No simple newspaper remedy will cure as bad a case of nasal catarrh as you mention. What you should do with the child is to send her out of the climate she is now in. The cold, dry air of Colorado, or the hot, dry air of Arizona, are the only sure cures. There is much danger of catarrh going into consumption.

Discouraged, New York, N. Y.—Stop the physic and try simple diet and reducing your weight. In a city of so many hospitals where the very best treatment in the world is open free to you, you should be able to be made a well woman.

treatment in the world is open free to you, you should be able to be made a well woman.

O. R., Talent, Ore.—You are mistaken about having seen anything concerning the drug in this column. We do not know of its use in removing scars. The authorities give it as used in lupus and kidney troubles. Better not try it on yourself except by prescription. Why didn't the druggist who sold it to you tell you how to use it?

A. C., Adairsville, Ga.—Sometimes indigestion may be cured, and sometimes it has come to stay. That depends upon the strength of the digestive organs and the treatment they have received. If you are a drinking man stop the liquor. If you drink coffee stop that. A little tobacco will not hurt, but do not use it to excess. Eat the simplest and most digestible food, and chew every mouthful thoroughly before swallowing. You can arrange your own diet by cutting out whatever you can not digest easily. After each meal take a half glass of hot water with a half teaspoonful of cooking soda dissolved in it. Breathe long breaths of fresh air, and give your body plenty of massaging. A dose of salts, before breakfast, two or three times a week may be of advantage if your bowels are sluggish. If you will do what you are told to do, you may be cured or greatly relieved, but if you will not, what is the good of advice?

E. M. F., Noble, Okla.—For a while suppose you try no medicine of any kind and put yourself on a digestible diet. You have taken enough medicine to choke a horse, and as it does you no good, it might be advantageous for you to let it alone for a season. If you drink coffee stop it. Read the advice above for indigestion, and maybe you can get some good out of it. If you could get farther West, to the high and dry country of Colorado you might be benefited.

Remarkable Popularity of the World Famed Remarkable Popularity of the World Famed Cornish Pianos and Organs.

The most popular instruments in the World seem to be the Cornish Pianos and Organs if we are to judge by the endorsements they have received during the last half a century from a quarter of a million satisfied patrons.

Recently one of the most motable firms of export merchants in New York City who have branches in India, Ceylon, China and Japan, in sending an organ for a new customer of theirs in the interior of China, informed Messrs Cornish that the goods were intended to be transported a thousand miles after arriving in Shanghai.

Recently Messrs Cornish received the following letter from the Superintending Minister of the Missionary Board if Natal, South Africa:

"I have pleasure in stating that the organ manufactured by Messrs Cornish for the new Wesleyan Methodist Church at Dundee is in every respect a most suitable instrument. The tone is rich and full and the compass all that can be desired."

an inat can be desired."

In addition to an increasing domestic trade there is steady demand for Cornish Pianos in Australia, Ne Zealand, South Africa, the East and West Indies areven in Iceland and Finland.

nearly as large or pretentious as now.

We have frequently said that with the generous co-operation of our countless readers we would find ourselves in a position to produce a bigger and better COMFORT. As we have been fortunate in having such enthusiastic support from those who appreciate and enjoy the varied interesting contents of their favorite monthly periodical, we now find it possible to continue for a little longer the present advantageous fifteen-cent rate, although not without sacrifice upon our part.

Yet we are building a strong foundation for more healthy and profitable growth which is sure to follow such community of interest and effort, as we enjoy through the medium of six millions of hearts that are beating with the slogan of COMFORT, which is "ever onward and upward."

After the concluding chapters of "St. Elmo" appear we shall immediately commence the opening chapter of another beautiful story, written by this famous writer, whose pen name has become famous on two continents; this new serial story, entitled "A Speckled Bird." the last story written by Mrs. Augusta Evans Wilson, will, if possible, exceed the popularity of "St. Elmo," for the serial rights to print, more money was paid by COMFORT than is annually expended on the entire editorial make-up of many periodicals.

The Sisters' Corner feature, Uncle Charlie with his throng of happy COMFORT Cousins, the regular departments devoted to interesting topics, short story after short story, Music and special features will aid COMFORT to retain its pre-eminent position among the popular home monthlies, and it is not too much to expect the usual and commonplace "extras" which the publisher so generously contributes regularly; in fact, nearly every month there is a surprise for the readers, in the shape of some added article or feature.

COMPLETE HOLY BIBLE

After repeated requests from our thousands of readers and club workers, we are prepared to furnish a COM-PLETE HOLY BIBLE, in a smaller size than our regular Family Bible. The new offering is indeed a perfect charm; a thoroughly complete Bible, consisting of over 836 pages, with nine colored maps, soft binding, half padded, round corners, finished with red edges, is five and a half inches long, three and a half inches wide and nearly an inch thick, weighing half a pound, lit is a thorough Bible with full and complete books of the old and new testaments. For Sunday School workers, that will please. Bypeo-operating with a Bible maker and a Bindery, we were enabled to dictate terms and agreed to purchase an enormous quantity during the next year if a low price would be made, in order that we might give our hosts of friends and readers at least one grand opportunity to procure one or more Bibles for their own use or as gifts, knowing well enough that we shall receive many second orders from our first purchasers. Modern machinery and skilled workmen produce these Bibles in quantities made in the highest order of workmanship. Each and every Bible is sent with a guarantee that it is perfect in each and every detail; and what will please you most is the thorough manner in which they are bound and finished. The soft padded covers are the same as in FULL MOROCCO BIBLES costing $10.00 each.

Please do not send for this Bible expecting to receive a great, big book by express; we offer the FAMILY BIBLE elsewhere. This small Bible is for the same purposes, but is more convenient to carry about. Knowing we shall receive second orders from those who send for one of these Bibles, we are making a specially attractive introduction proposition below.

It is impossible to give in this announcement more than a slight idea of the magnitude of this great History, with its myriad pictures and accurate descriptions. It virtually goes into the haunts of all animals and shows them as they live.

Wood's Natural History is the recognized authority all over the world for accurate information regarding the habits, haunts, peculiarities and diseases of the Animal Kingdom. The work is a veritable treasure-house of valuable information, interestingly told, and replete with hundreds of accurate and artistic illustrations. This mammoth Cyclopædia of the Animal World consists of over eight hundred pages and is substantially bound in stiff paper covers. Size of open book, 8x11 inches, and nearly 2 inches thick. It is in clear print on good paper, with five hundred illustrations by special artists. The countless anecdotes which it contains will make merry many a long winter evening, and the handreds of pages of thrilling adventures which those daring people, who traverse mountain and morass, jungle and desert, to learn the habits of the animal kingdom undergo, will furnish true, heartfelt enjoyment to every member of the family—young and old. As the book contains full descriptions of all domestic animals, also, with treatment and cures for their diseases, no farmer should be without it, and as the list embraces everything, from the guat to the giraffe, the bat to the bear, the mouse to the mastodon, the coyote to the cuscus, no boy, no hunter, no student—in fact, nobody should neglect this grandest of all offers. So thrilling and exciting are many of these adventures as to equal the wildest tales of the tropics, or the most blood-carding gloss story; and yet they are all true, being the transcripts of personal experiences of noted travelers. Not only are they of sufficient importance to amuse and instruct the young, but they will absorb the attention and pass away many a dull bour for the old and world

A Free Treatment To All Who Ask

If you are sick—if you suffer—if you are afflicted with any ailment—if you are worn out, tired or failing—if you have an ache or a pain—if you need medical advice—if you are not in perfect health—if you lack the energy, vim, vigor and "go" that make life worth living; whether you are rich or poor—old or young—man or woman, read what I have to say, hear what I have to offer you.

Positive Proof Without Price

I have probably had more experience and more success than any living physician, but I don't ask you to believe that. I don't ask you to believe that my remedies are better than others. I don't ask you to take my word for anything. But I do ask you to give me a chance to prove my ability—to prove what my treatment will do for you—to prove that I can cure you—and to prove it at my own expense—to pay the cost, every penny of it myself. I ask permission to send you—to deliver into your hands—absolutely without cost to you a proof treatment that will convince you. Remedies that have cured thousands, remedies that I believe will cure you.

May I Send The Proof?

This is all I ask. No money—No promises to buy—

On the virtue of my treatment I base my reputation. On your gratitude and honesty I base my hope of reward. I hold the record of thousands of cures—not "some better," but cured to stay cured—restored to perfect health. Is the prospect of being hearty and strong and big and well worth a few minutes of your time and a two-cent stamp? That's all it costs. Don't let the opportunity pass.

in life, and it is during Lent that we should strive to give a little time to devotion, and we should endeavor to hush the warring elements in our nature, and listen to the "still small voice," and seek a little of the peace that passeth understanding. It will be all the better for us, if we do this. We shall gain, both physically and spiritually. For once in a while, as we hurry through life, we should all stop to note the road on which we are traveling, and mark where it leads to, and what is at the end of it. Perhaps such a period of reflection may show us that we are on the wrong road, that we have lost our way, and are far, far from home, deep in the morass that threatens our destruction, sinking in quicksands that will eventually engulf us.

Once a year men take stock of their business, and calculate their losses and gains, so they may know just where they stand. It is in Lent that a man should take stock of himself, and note where he is journeying. If he is not satisfied with the inventory he has taken of himself, if his footsteps are uncertain, the outlook dark, the storm clouds gathering, he need not de-

No trial which has taken place in this country, except those of the assassins of President Garfield and President McKinley, has caused wider interest and comment than that of Harry Thaw, the young Pittsburg millionaire, for the shooting of Stanford White, the famous New York architect. It is hardly necessary to go into details. Evelyn Nesbit, a pretty chorus girl, was the cause of all the trouble. After a more or less scandalous career, Thaw married her, and then was her opportunity to have retired from public view, and as wife, possibly mother, to have lived down her past. But the young Mrs. Thaw was not made of such stern stuff. She could not make the sacrifice even in so good a cause. She came back to New York where White was, and her husband's jealousy grew until one night last summer he killed the man whom Mrs. Thaw swears first led her astray.

Thousands of young girls in every part of the United States, whose homes are comfortable, and whose lives might be fitly shaped for what is best in living are drawn to the city by the and whose lives might be fitly shaped for what is best in living, are drawn to the city by the promises of better opportunities and wider scope of mind and work, only to find disappointment and death, or the life that is worse, now and hereafter. These girls may read the dreadful story of Evelyn Nesbit and be properly shocked at it, but will they heed it? Will they listen to the words of the wise who would save them, or will they still want to try for themselves and weep the bitter tears of sorrow that selves and weep the bitter tears of sorrow that must come to most who know not the lure of the city, and depend upon the careless, often the wicked, to instruct them in the ways they should not go? Comfort has many readers among the young who are dissatisfied with the simpler life of the country, and long to go to the city, and to these this word of warning in all kindliness is spoken. Better rust in the country than rot in the town.

The are now approaching that portion of the church year, known as Lent. Easter comes early this year—on March 31st. Lent used to be observed only by Catholics and Episcopalians, but nowadays its observance is becoming more general.

In these days of hurry and scurry, when every nerve is strained to its utmost tension, and brain and body racked to the point of exhaustion, anything that calls a halt to the mad rush of life is to be welcomed. As the old saw says, "Life is not all beer and skittles," and neither is it all moil and strife, social functions and money getting. There is a deeper purpose in life, and it is during Lent that we should strive to give a little time to devotion, and wes should endeavor to hush the warring elements in our nature, and listen to the "still small voice," and seek a little of the peace that passet understanding. Our interest in seeking to help the unfortunate proves that, and our generous methods of catering also substantially prove it. You can rest assured that no publication will ever do better by its readers, ever can do better by its readers and manage to exist, than will Comfort. Every promise we make we keep. Some, magazines make a specialty of proclaiming their generous intentions towards their readers only to still further curtail the scanty literary fare provided for them. Our word is our bond. Comfort is the biggest and best, not because we say so, but because it is so, and no one knows this fact to be true better than yourselves.

life of women, we commence in this issue to happenings from all over the country, showing the many odd and chrious things women are doing. We would like to know if our readers are interested in this style of information, and the Editor would be pleased to have all express their opinion on the subject. A postal from you, or a few words in a letter when you are

Those who from force of habit have procrastinated in the matter of renewing their

We feel confident that if your subscription is not renewed, it is not because you cannot afford the trifling outlay, only 15 cents, necessary to secure our paper for one year, but simply because you have been unable to get to the would be foolish enough to stop an excellent magazine like ours, and to take in its place another publication of inferior quality and higher price. Once more then, let us assur: our

Child Labor

"One of the hard problems to handle," said the philanthropist, "is that of child laborthat is, making children under 14 do day's work, as an adult does. Most states have laws against it, but they vary, and in addition we must contend against the need of what the children may earn by working in families and getting no help in our efforts from parents. According to the latest census there were 1,750,178 children from 10 to 15 years of age engaged in various occupation, and in 20,452 families 35.7 of the breadwinners were under 15. Of the total, 1,054,446 were employed on the farms where they lived. Next to farm work comes servants and waiters, of whom there are 138,065, mostly girls. Of general laborers, principally working in cities, there were 128,617, all being boys except 17,059. In the gainful occupations about one third were ears of age, and more than one half above 14. Of working children about three fourths are boys. The per cent. of colored child laborers is much higher than among whites, but it is almost entirely on farms. More children are employed in cotton mills than in any other industry, and the majority of them are in New England, North and South Carolina and Georgia. Of the 71,622 messengers, errand boys and cash girls, 90 per cent. are boys. Of the textile workers and needle trades, 29,-334 were girls and 5,123 boys. In 188 families the children supported them entirely, the size of the families ranging from five to eight dependents. In some families every member is a bread winner, and still the children have to work. However, this is merely for gain, and here is where the law should be exercised on the parents.

A Paid Sunday School

"As far as I know," said a clerical-looking party, "there is but one Sunday school in this country, or the world, where teachers and tuition cost money. Some say it is not a good plan, but I think it is. This school has competent teachers who instruct children on religious subjects of an entirely undenominational character, and the scholars pay a tuition see of $15. The school meets every Sunday morning, and opens with simple religious exercises of responsive Bible reading and singing of hymns. For the little ones there is a kindergarten with Bible stories and songs, and for the older ones the Bible is taught in all its phases, moral, historical and literary. The good part of the Bible is taught to the children, and they are shown how its precepts may make better boys and girls of them, and how they can improve all persons with whom they come in contact. It is simply teaching practical religion to the right kind of children by competent and liberal-minded teachers, and the result cannot help being of the greatest benefit now and hereafter. Pictures and lectures are constantly used to interest the children in their Bible studies, and the school is growing, with bright prospects of similar schools being established elsewhere."

CHAPTER X. SECOND THOUGHTS.

HE lawyer's visit had operated upon Joseph Parkhurst as a stone thrown into a pool—producing movement and agitation, a general feeling of unrest, which time alone could calm. There are some natures that seem made for a particular sphere and are not pliant enough to adapt themselves to the requisitions of another. So it was with him. He had been bred to all the privileges which wealth and high birth bestow, and in a quiet way had been in the habit of looking down upon all who did not move in the same circle with himself.

To such a man the sudden downfall which has already been described proved a severe not move in the same circle with himself.

To such a man the sudden downfall which has already been described proved a severe blow. The thought of ranking with those whom he had regarded with condescension only, and of being treated as an inferior by those with whom he had hitherto moved on terms of perfect equality, was indeed bitter to one of his disposition. He could no longer endure to live where he would be subjected to such mortifications. But for that imperative reason he never would have brought himself to what in his case might be fairly considered a desperate stepnamely, a home in the wilderness. It was a sacrifice which he made upon the altar of his pride. He had indeed exhibited a little interest in fitting up the cabin, but after that was completed he sank into a state of lethargy which gave Mabel, when she observed it, a vague feeling of uneasiness. But she, herself, was so thoroughly contented with the change she was unable to enter into her father's feelings. She had no longings after the old life which she had led in the city. This was particularly the case after her acquaintance with Henry Davenport had ripened into intimacy, which led to their being almost daily together.

Both Henry and Mabel had many tastes in common. They delighted in long walks, or gallops upon the soft turf, and scarcely a day passed without some such mutual engagement. In addition to this, Davenport had placed a boat on the little sheet of water near the house, and would often row his fair companion across it. He had even taught her to manage an oar with considerable decreative.

boat on the little sheet of water near the house, and would often row his fair companion across it. He had even taught her to manage an oar with considerable dexterity, so that she would sometimes laughingly order him to take his turn as passenger while she plied the oars.

But Mr. Parkhurst had no such pleasant associations with the country. The cultivation of land he regarded as irksome but essential to the support of the family. He therefore committed it to other hands, nor did he even reserve to himself the general superintendence of the farming operations, for which indeed he was as little fitted by experience as by inclination.

him that long as he regarded his present state as evitable, these feelings were kept under some limitation, and he submitted, though with an ill ce, to what he knew no complaints could edy. But after his conversation with the yer the feeling of disgust for his present mstances and yearning for the past came By Horatio Alger, Jr.

he thought of the possibility which existed of regaining what he so much coveted, the more desirable it seemed—the more unendurable it appeared to get along without them.

"To think," he murmured to himself, as he paced his apartment with hasty steps, "to think that I may again live in the old mansion which I was compelled to surrender; that I may again keep my carriage and entertain my old friends, and live as befits a gentleman of my rank and breeding! One year of my former life is worth five, nay ten, in this out-of-theway place where I am deprived of all that I value. Yes, I may get it all back. He says so, and though he is not a gentleman, yet his story is a plausible one. But the condition—"

Here his countenance changed, and with think that I may again live in the old mansion which I was compelled to surrender; that I may again keep my carriage and entertain my old friends, and live as befits a gentleman of my rank and breeding! One year of my former life is worth five, nay ten, in this out-of-the-way place where I am deprived of all that I value. Yes, I may get it all back. He says so, and though he is not a gentleman, yet his story is a plausible one. But the condition—" Here his countenance changed, and with some heat he exclaimed: "The low-born fellow has actually the audacity to demand Mabel's hand in marriage, and to make that the condition of restoring to me what is rightfully my own. I have a great mind to have him arrested!"

A moment's reflection was sufficient to con-him arrested!"

A moment's reflection was sufficient to convince Mr. Parkhurst that such a proceeding would be ill-advised, inasmuch as he would be utterly unable to prove anything. The lawyer would undoubtedly meet his charges by a cool denial. He could hardly be expected to admit denial. He could hardly be expected to admit anything to his own detriment.

What, then, could be done?
There seemed to be but a single alternative, either to give up all thought of obtaining the money and its contingent advantages, or to submit to the condition imposed.
The last Joseph Parkhurst could not at first endure to think of; but being a man who had

Mr. Davenport was unquestionably much the wealthier. But, as he had no aristocratic prejudices to contend against, it was not likely that this would have any effect upon his mind. "Father," said Mabel in a tone of hesitation, arising from the knowledge of the purpose for which she solicited an interview, "I should be glad to see you in the study a few minutes." "Certainly," said her father, surprised that she should have anticipated a request which he had himself thought of making.

Mehitable heard this request through the half-open door, and the curiosity of the handmaiden—a quality of which she certainly had her share—was greatly excited.

"I wonder what she's got to say to her father," thought that lady. "Maybe she's going to complain of me. She told me yesterday that she thought the meat was overdone. A pretty chit she is to talk to me, that knew all about cooking before she was born."

Mehitable forgot that her expressions were been accustomed through life to regard his own comfort and advantage of paramount importance, he began little by little to reconcile himself to it. This he was the better able to do because the objections were merely from his own prejudice, not from regard for his daughter's feelings. It then ultimately resolved itself to this, and in this form he submitted it to himself for consideration.

Would it be a greater sacrifice for him to put up with an unacceptable son-in-law, or to spend the remainder of his life in a wilderness and a state of society which he detested?

It was not difficult to decide what the answer would be. It required only little time to ar-

The lawyer had had the foresight to see this.

The lawyer had had the foresight to see this, and for this reason he had had the good policy not to insist upon an immediate answer to his proposition, but to give time for Mr. Parkhurst's selfishness to present the matter in its bearing upon his own comfort.

After Joseph Parkhurst had begun to reconcile himself to that branch of the alternative which would require from him the least sacrifice, the process became rapid.

"After all," he thought, "there is nothing in this man's profession which should interfere with his being a gentleman, and if he is lacking a pedigree the deficiency can easily be supplied by money. It can be reported that he has high connections in England, and as no one will take the trouble to go over and ascertain the incorrectness of the report, it will pass unquestioned. It is, I admit, presumption in him to make the demand; still, it is better to sacrifice a little pride for the sake of a greet adventers.

"I'd like to know what it is they're a-going "I'd like to know what it is they're a-going to talk about," repeated Mehitable, as she prepared to clear away the table. "Perhaps the squire may say something about that fine young man that came here yesterday, and seemed so struck with my appearance. I'd give a good deal to know who he is, and what is his business with the squire, and whether he thinks of settling down in this deestrict of country, and whether he's married, though I don't think he is, and whether he isn't in search of a wife."

Mehitable's volubility in wondering was very great, but it was at least fully equaled by her curiosity. Accustomed as she had been for many years past to consider, in regard to every man, whether he was available in a matrimonial way, the politeness of the lawyer, added to Jerry's hint, had worked upon her imagination to such an extent that she was already hold. to such an extent that she was already half persuaded that it required but an effort upon her part to bring the lawyer to her feet. These thoughts were soon terminated by the closing door after Mabel and her parent.

"I wonder if I couldn't creep up to the door and hear what they're a reasyin'," thought Mehitable to herself. "I've a great mind to. I guess I'll take the dust brush with me, so's if the door should suddenly open, they'd think I'm a-dustin'," and she lost no time in putting it into execution.

"The dishes may stand," she muttered. "Jerry hain't had his breakfast, and I guess I'll let the table wait for him a few minutes."

Seizing the dust brush Mehitable passed cautiously into the entry, treading on tiptoe and avoiding carefully even the least noise, intent upon gratifying her natural desire for information without the somewhat awkward accident of discovery.

She leaved her head forward so that her ear

She leaned her head forward so that her ear was close to the keyhole, and in this attitude listened eagerly to what was said. What she heard was of even greater interest than she had articlested.

But, alas for poor Mehitable! In her plans of avoiding detection there was one element of uncertainty she had quite forgotten to of uncertainty she had quite forgotten to take note.

Jerry had gone out early in the morning in search of birds' eggs, of which he had already collected quite a variety, and this made him late for breakfast.

Entering the kitchen with bare feet he did not make sufficient noise to attract attention. This was an unfortunate circumstance for her, as it proved. Entering the kitchen, Jerry naturally looked about for Mehitable. Not finding her he stepped to the entry door, and there, to his surprise, found her in the act of eavesdropping.

"I'll fix her," thought the boy, after pausing a minute or two, hoping that she would look up and learn to her confusion that she was discovered. Jerry finally got tired of waiting and determined to precipitate matters.

Accordingly he gave a slight cough, which was sufficient, however, to draw Mehitable's attention.

was sumcient, however, to draw Menitable's attention.

Turning suddenly she saw the boy looking at her with a whimsically knowing air, that clearly indicated that he very well understood what she was about.

Menitable started with a guilty look, and her sallow face actually flushed.

"Why, Jerry," said she in a flustered manner, "have you got back? I thought I'd let the breakfast things stand till you got home, and as the entry needed dustin' I'd go to work doin' it."

"Do you generally dust the keyhole, Hitty?" asked the boy, his eyes twinkling with mirth.

"What do you mean, Jerry Blue?" inquired Menitable with offended dignity.

"Oh, I don't mean anything, of course," said the provoking boy. "Only I saw you bending down with your ear close to the keyhole."

"I suppose you hain't any objection to my

"I suppose you hain't any objection to my stoopin' over and tying up my shoestrings," said Mehitable, in an injured tone.
"It took you pretty long to tie it, then. You didn't seem to be doing nothing for about five minutes while I was looking at you."
"Oh, you audacious boy!" exclaimed she. "How do you dare to say such things about a poor, unprotected girl that hasn't done you any harm! I've lived for years and years—"
"There's no doubt about that, Hitty," said Jerry with a meaning look.
"Don't you interrupt me, you little wretch. I ain't too old to be your sister."
"Oh, my gracious!" exclaimed Jerry. "I should as soon think of being brother to my own grandmother."
"You can't have any tea this morning," said Mehitable spitefully."

"I am."

"You!" retorted Mehitable in a shrill voice, turning up her nose in ineffable contempt.
"Yes, that is, unless you'd like to have me tell Mabel about you listening at the door."
This produced another outbreak from Mehitable, who nevertheless thought it most prudent to comply with the boy's demand—feeling that she had placed herself in his power. Nor was this the first occasion on which Mehitable had to rue the results of eavesdropping. eavesdropping.

At that moment Mabel could only think of one person. She thought it possible that Henry Davenport, in his impatience to have the matter decided, might have called upon her father without her knowledge. In this case her father's answer, when she had requested a private interview, could readily be understood.

"Was it Henry Davenport?" she asked in a low voice, endeavoring not to look unduly interested.

"Henry Davenport!" repeated Mr. Parkhurst in some surprise. "Certainly not. I know of no especial reason for his calling. It was a lawyer from New York."

"Was he a man, of about forty, with a rather forbidding aspect?" inquired Mabel.

"No," said Mr. Parkhurst, hesitating, for it was his desire that his daughter should look as favorably as possible upon the stranger. "I should not describe him in that manner. He was not absolutely young, to be sure, nor I suppose what the ladies would call handsome, but you know beauty is not expected of a man."

"I won't quarrel with you on that point, father," said Mabel, laughing, "nor oblige you to defend him. Whether he is as homely as a rail fence or as handsome as an angel, he is nothing to me. The Art of Netting

OME time ago we published an article on netting, but as this is an art which the younger people are not very familiar with, we will give again the method of doing this work for the benefit of all who have made inquiries in regard to it.

The making of twine or thread into meshes is a contrivance of ancient date for catching fish, birds, and even enclosing tracts of land into which wild animals were driven.

Hammocks or tennis nets can also be made by following the succeeding instructions:

The cord employed should be of a soft cotton variety. For a measure take a smooth piece of

The cord employed should be of a soft cotton variety. For a measure take a smooth piece of hard wood, eight or ten inches in length, one and one half inches wide, and three quarters of an inch thick, having it planed off thin toward one edge, about an eighth of an inch in thickness. In making fancy netting round wood, steel or ivory sticks, or flat ones, in two widths are used; and they may be obtained in almost any fancy work store. A shuttle will also be needed, and if it cannot be obtained elsewhere, can also be manufactured at home. To make a shuttle, take a smooth piece of hard wood ten or eleven inches long, a little less than an inch wide, and only thick enough to be supple and not break; at one end cut it out so as to form a deep curve or heel and shape the other end off to a long point; about an inch and a quarter below the point cut away the wood about an eighth of an inch from each side of the center for four inches down to form a prong about which the cord is to be wound. In winding a shuttle remember that it should be held in one position so as not to twist the cord, and wind tightly so it will not slip off during the knotting.

To make a hammock, tie the cord selected around the wedge, making an ordinary knot on the thinner edge. Have ready a good-sized hook in a convenient place; slip the loop off the wedge and throw it over the hook, then take the wedge in the left hand and hold the thickest edge toward you; bring the cord from the loop on the hook over the wedge, carry the shuttle up underneath and press it through the loop on the hook; pull the cord tightly so that the sides of the loop through which the shuttle passes will be straight and tight, and the end of the loop even with the top of the wedge, holding the end of the loop so that the knot at the hook will not slip away from the hook. Place the thumb close to the end of the loop, holding the cord drawn through the loop down tightly; now throw the cord up over the loop, pull the shuttle through, carrying it downwards and to the right and underneath the two threads under the thumb, close to the loop shock in a convenient place; slip the cord selected around the wedge, carry the kneedles, such as are sold at Fancy Work Stores in the large Cities. again; take up the next two wedges in the same manner and again throw the cord over the hook, continue in this way until all the meshes in this end are taken up, to form the guys. Now wind the cord tightly about the guys far enough below the hook to have a ring sufficiently large to suspend the hammock, winding the cord closely for several inches; then lift the ring off the hook and wind it the same way.

Finish the other end in a similar manner. If one prefers, metal rings can be used, and will be more durable.

The thumb must be pressed firmly over the cord and the cord drawn as tightly as possible, so that a slip knot will not be produced; now slip this loop off the wedge and carry the cord over the wedge, close to the knot last formed, then carry the shuttle up underneath and pass it up through the loop last removed from the wedge, carry the shuttle downward over the wedge, also allowing the wedge to slip downward; pull the cord tightly so as to draw the loop down straight and tight and bring it close to the top of the wedge, then place the thumb close to the end of the loop and press it closely over the cord, as previously directed. Bring the cord up over the loop, pass the shuttle under the loop drawn down, taking up both sides of the loop, then carry the shuttle downward over the wedge, and pull the cord tightly to make another knot, always holding the thumb closely till the knot is made. Now slip this loop off the wedge and continue in this manner to make knots and loops until the required width of the hammock is obtained. Thirty-six meshes make a good width.

Tie the ends thus, run through in a knot, and place this loop of cord over the hook, now take the shuttle in hand, pass the cord over the wedge, carry the shuttle up underneath, and pass it up through the mesh nearest the working cord, carry the shuttle downward over the wedge, pulling the cord tightly so as to draw the wedge, pulling the cord tightly so as to draw the loop firmly, and bring it close to the top of the wedge; throw the cord up over the loop and pass the shuttle under the loop, holding the thumb, and drawing the cord in the same way as above directed for making the meshes. Mail all letters at least three months before the issue for which they are intended.

Always give your correct name and address, as no letter will be published excepting over it. This enables the sisters to write directly to each other.

Do not write us for samples or patterns of the fancy work which have appeared. When publishing any particular piece of work, we give the plainest possible directions for making and usually illustrate it. It is absolutely useless for you to write for more information, or for samples, or patterns of anything unless stated that they can be supplied.

Write fully of your views and ideas, yourself and homesurroundings, "give as freely as ye receive," but if your first letter does not appear, do not feel utterly discouraged. Remember the old adage, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again."

DEAR SISTERS:

DEAR SISTERS:

As many of you have been disappointed by the non-appearance of your letters, I will try to make amends somewhat by a little explanation. You all must realize that with the enormous subscription list which Comfort has, a goodly number of letters come to this department each month, many more in fact, than we could possibly publish, if every page were devoted to them; so you see, as this is not possible, in choosing those which shall appear, it is simply a survival of the fittest, that is, the letters which are really the best and will give the most pleasure and information, are naturally and rightfully chosen. Then the others are considered and each recipe request, or bit of experience, or help is weeded out and appears in its proper place, thus we try to be just to all and make this corner as interesting and helpful as possible. Do not feel badly if your first letter failed to find a place, just make the next one so good, it can not meet a similar fate.

I am deeply interested in the Sisters' Corner, and love to read letters from all parts of the United States, and I will join in with the rest of the sisters and represent Washington. We are living in Palouse, Washington, second best town west of the Cascade mountains. It is situated on the north slope of Palouse River, one of the most beautiful places for natural scenery of all kinds in the state. We can take an electric car at six P. We will sooner or later move out on the farm, and I will go into the poultry business, as I dearly love to look after little chicks.

Dear Editor and Sisters:

I'm a stranger in the letter department, that is, in writing, but not reading. I enjoy all the letters, and especially those from Missouri and Indiana, as these states were both my home for some time. My husband and family lived in Missouri about five years, near Breckenridge. His mother is living there now, then we lived in Indiana seven years. We came to Dakota two years ago and we are living now within one mile of the Missouri River and it is very beautiful here in summer. The steamer travels up and down the river until fall, then all through the long winter the children have to walk three miles to school, that is, when it is not too bad.

I am the mother of four, three boys, Oren, Estle and Paul and one girl named Edith. The two oldest were born in Missouri, and the others in Indiana.

I suppose there are a great many here in Dakota, diana.

I suppose there are a great many here in Dakota, who take Comfort and I surely think it a comfort to have it in the house these long, dreary winter nights in the far West when the prairie chickens fly over your house and the hungry cayotes can be heard growling around, the wind playing hide-and go-seek here and there.

We have had lots of snow, and it has been falling all day.

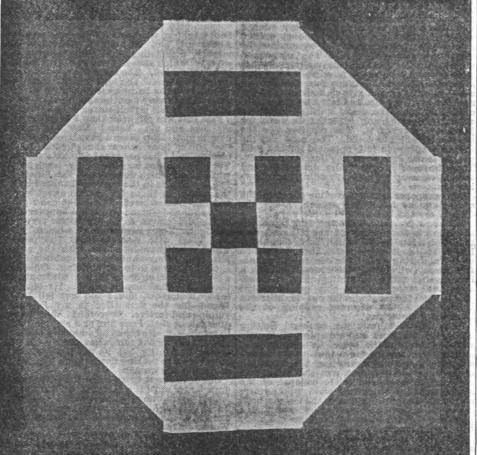

We have had lots of show, and so all day.

Now for a pencil description of myself. I am quite tall, with brown hair and blue eyes, generally good-natured and full of fun.

I firmly believe in looking on the bright side, or in other words, "Stay on the Sunny Side," and help all you can as you go along if you wish to be happy.

DEAR EDITOR AND SISTERS:
I have been a subscriber to Comfort one year.
I take several magazines. Comfort is my choice and preference, and I echo the wish of other sisters that it might come every week, I read everything from beginning to finish.
I will try to be helpful to all. I have always tried to do all the good I could in all the ways I could at all the times I could, to all the people
I could, and I mean to just as long as ever I can.

my mother's birthday, especially Mrs. Dorman;
she came all the way from England.
Mrs. A. I. B. The Florida moss and seashells are beautiful, thank you.
Mrs. J. Y. Bryant, Md. I thank you for the pretty sewing bag.
Mrs. Fairbanks, Cal. Accept my thanks for the neat little cift.

I will now tell you something of myself. Unlike so many of you I did not succeed in getting "one of the best husbands in the world," and so a year ago I was compelled to go out into the world, with two little children to care for, one only a baby in my arms, my health poor, and no one to turn to.

I want to earn an honest living and enjoy most kinds of work. I would like to receive woolen, or sik pleces for quilts, also flower seeds, and would appreciate bulbs of dahlias. I will try to return favors.

If any of you have trouble with canned fruit spoiling, try dipping the rims of the can tops in melted bees wax. I will send a recipe for liniment, which is said to be excellent.

I wish I could send a blessing to all the dear shutins.

I do not wish to boast of my home, but will tell you that I have always lived on a beautiful and voul that I have my own chickens, and enjoy all the fresh eggs I want, and fresh vegetables and fruit. I have lived on the same farm for thirty-eight years, and I am not sick of it yet.

Here is a little verse for the dear shutins:

"Bear thee up, be strong and fearless,
Let not sorrow bend thee down,
In thy need be calm and tearless,
Thou shalt wear a starry crown."

I will not wear my welcome out this time, I have many good things to pring you later.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

I live in Southwest Missouri on the farm where I was born, and don't think I would feel at home anywhere else. I am a farmer's daughter and I like country life better than town life. I enjoy the pure, fresh air and like to roam the pastures in search of the cows and drive them home; these simple pleasures one can only enjoy in the country. I am nineteen years old, five feet five inches tall, have blue eyes, light hair and a fair complexion. I am quite a musician. I have an organ, guitar and banjo, and can play the French harp and Jew's harp.

I am not afraid of work as my mamma always taught me to help. I love it, and can cook, sew or do anything that a farmer's daughter has to do. I have been going to Horner College, and while I am, as some people would say, only a farmer's daughter, I have a deep desire for an education and enjoy the privileges I have.

Miss Estella Freeland. I agree with you on what were read about heaving matience with the little ones.

Miss Estella Freeland. I agree with you on what you said about having patience with the little ones. We older ones should use lots of patience in trying to exert a good influence on the little ones, especially if we have brothers and sisters; and above all, teach them to have patience, for that is something no one ever had too much of.

Have any of you had the privilege of reading Thomas F. Lockhart's little book? If so, you would surely never complain or grumble at anything that goes wrong through life. Just think of his condition and then of how kind the Heavenly Father is to us. We surely don't appreciate His kindness as we ought. I will ask a little favor. Will all of the readers of my age write to me? I will stry to answer all. Wishing success to our editor and the sisters,

Comfort

Grandma sits in her easy-chair
By the firelight's ruddy glow,
And in and out her needles flash
Knitting the stocking toe.
Her hair is soft, but thin and white,
And her eyes hold a merry smile;
Ask her whence comes her sweet content—
"Why, I take Comfort all the while."

A baby lay in his downy bed,
Gazing with wondering eyes—
Some pure angel, passing by,
Must have dropped him from the skies.
A mother knelt by the cradle low.
And joy in her dear eyes came,
"My hope, my pride, for years to come,
And Comfort shall be his name."

Old Dame Puss in her basket lay,
And close to her furry side
Was a little bundle as soft as silk
That wiggled and squirmed and cried.
That it would be a cat some day
You'd never, never guess,
"What will you call it, dear?" I asked,
"Comfort," said little Bess.

Roy goes down to sail his boat
Where the wild waves wash the beach.
And the water stretches far away,
As far as the eye can reach.
Such a dear little boat, with white sails spread,
Such a beauty never was seen,
See how she rides the tossing waves,
He calls her Comfort Queen.

A farmer sat by the evening lamp,
A paper in his hand,
His hair thrown back from off a brow
That was majestic—grand!
"What paper do you read, my friend?
What's best for wife or son?"
"COMFORT," answered the farmer low,
"COMFORT, 'tis the only one!"

So, friends, if you are tired of life,
 If your lot is hard to bear,
 If you are bowed beneath a load
 Of overwhelming care,
 If you'd lift your life to one
 Of happiness and cheer,
 And brighten others as you go,
 Take Comfort for a year.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:
Here I am again. Do I come too often? I hope not.

Mrs. B. L. Griffitts. I agree with you, mothers should teach their children to do all kinds of housework and make good cooks of them. I have two little daughters and when they are old enough I shall teach them to be model housekeepers so when they marry they will not be like the friend you wrote about who did not know how to

Mrs. A. Pitts. I am going to make some paper racks as you suggested. I wish I could see your pretty rooms? I will try to remember and send you a quit block.

Estella Freeland. I liked your letter so much I would like to hear from you again personally, if you feel inclined to write, I will surely answer it.

Mrs. John J. Myer. You certainly must live in a lovely country. I would like to visit Niagara Falls. I am anxious to hear more about that watch-chain. I am sending in a recipe for making limiment that I make and keep on hand all the time; it will cure almost any pain such as headache, backache, sideache, and toothache. Sometime I will tell you of a cholera cure, which never fails.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

I have never read a letter in Comfort from North Platte, so thought I would write one. I have been a Comfort reader for several years. I have enjoyed it very much, especially the Sisters' Corner, and have corresponded with a good many shut-ins, and in every letter I sent a remembrance and a stamped envelope. If any of the sisters want a sample of smocking on gingham for sofa pillow covers, write to me and I'll send it.

From time to time during the years I have been reading Comfort, I have read of the good the sisters have been doing. A little here and a little there all help to make sunshine.

Every day should be distinguished by at least one particular act of sunshine for someone. As my year will be out soon, I want my name down for another year, fitteen cents for a whole year's good, solid reading. Everyone, young or old, can find something to interest them in your paper. When one sees Comfort, and reads it, they will be convinced that they could not get as good value elsewhere for fifteen cents.

I would like the sisters to give me a nice letter party on the 24th of April. I will try to answer all. Mrs. Minnie Perkins, North Platte, Neb.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

The tall athletic figure of a young man is seen leaning against the trunk of a tree. Half aloud he soliloquizes, and wonders what is keeping them. He asks himself why a woman of Mrs. Rosslyn's Puritanic strength of character should embrace the Catholic faith. "Is it for this i am to be separated from the object of my dearest desire?" The sound of many voices chanting the Ave Maria is borne to his waiting ears. The service ends, and Theta Rosslyn meets her lover, Gene Warfield. There is an opening for him in the West in Judge Blodgett's office. He will win wealth and fame, and coming back make Theta his wife. As he pleads he sees a small chain about Theta's neck, and asks what talisman is hiding there. Pulling at the chain he finds a tiny gold crucifix; he snaps the chain and dashes the crucifix to the ground. With a cry like a wounded animal, she catches the crucifix to ber breast. "God forgive me, if even for a little while I let your love words deceive me into forgetting the depth of the gulf which lies between us." Gene pleads with all the fervor of youth, but the girl dare not yield, and his pride battles with the angulsh which kills the soul, though the body yet lives.

Gene finds his mother waiting for him; she sees the stricken look, that goes to her heart, and she tries to comfort him. He will carry the scar to the grave. He feels all is lost save ambition. Gently the mother chides him. Ambition will never make him happy. Could she have her way she would have him a simple farmer, marry and settle down for a long and happy life. His uncle John is a good manager, but has spoiled him for the happy contented life. If she were sure the forces of his nature were always to be arrayed on the side of right, she would not mind. She is assured he will never yield to the power of gold, but she knows his weakness—the insatiable appetite for power, and this fear comes, because he has broken with all religious traditions. The mother's shoulders softly says, "God will take care of him."

Years pass and Eugene Warfield is in Excelsior, the home of the Harvester Trust and no longer an unknown lawyer. The boyish look is gone forever and the lines of power deepen. He finishes the last page of a paper and with the exclamation, "I am glad it is finished!" the door opens and Judge Blodgett enters. Gene tells him he has arrived in the nick of time.

CHAPTER III. (CONTINUED.)

HAVE noticed," the Judge remarked sententiously, "that the man who arrives in the nick of time, usually finds himself in a tight place. "You are at it, as usual, I see," with a glance at the manuscript on the desk.
"Yes, writing them out and sitting up all night like Webster to learn the speeches I expect to deliver impromptu next day," Gene replied, smiling.

pect to deliver impromptu next day," Gene replied, smiling.
"A good way, Warfield, a very good way. A speech is always better for a careful preparation beforehand, and then in the heat of an argument if you want to branch out you can, but you've got the main thread to come back to. You begin your legal battle next week I believe?

"Yes, but I confess it seems an almost hopeless undertaking. No, not that chair, Judge—it's got a round gone—take that leather-covered one, it's more comfortable. Yes, I'm to begin my fight next week. The evidence has all been collected; it seems meager enough, but it gives me a fighting chance when court convenes. I've done what I could to marshal my forces, but I begin to feel the pressure of Corcoran's power. I suppose I'll go on fighting then, though, until among them they crush me." As he spoke he took a piece of paper from the desk, rolled it into a tight ball and let it drop to the floor.

The action was significant and the Judge looked grave.

looked grave.

"Ca-areful, Gene, ca-areful," spreading out his hands on his pudgy knees as he spoke.

Gene's broad shoulders squared themselves and his lips tightened.

"You certainly wouldn't wish to have me truckle to them, Judge?"

"N-o," the Judge brought out the word slowly, "and yet, Gene, I've seen young men as able as you get caught between that upper and nether millstone, the Trusts and the people, and I've seen them ground up a heap finer than anything the mill of the gods ever did grind, and I say now, I hope you'll feel your way carefully. I've never had a son," he went on, his voice softening, "and all my girls are dead and under the grass roots, and somehow you've come to be almost like a son to me, and I'd hate to have you get into a mixup with Corcoran. It isn't the Trust I fear. It has bought legislatures and bullied courts until it imagines the public is powerless against it. Soulless, blind, molelike it burrows and knows not its digging betrays it to its own destruction. No, it isn't the Trusts I fear, but the brains which conceived 'em, the stupendous power summed up in that one word—Corcoran. Mind—I wouldn't want you to do anything against the dictates of your own conscience—and yet I want you to be eareful. There are more ways than one of downing a man, and if smirching his character doesn't work there are always rufflans to be hired to strike a blow in the dark. It is a sad commentary on our boasted civilization but it is so." the dark. It is a sad commentary on our boasted civilization but it is so."

Gene made no reply to the Judge's warning, though he felt a vague uneasiness creep over him. A sense of his own hopelessness to cope with the power against which he was arrayed was strong upon him. He turned back to his desk and collected the scattered sheets into a nile.

"Here, Judge," he said as he handed them over, "just look this over and polish it up a bit for me, if you please. You'll find it pretty rough. I wish sometimes I'd taken my four wears at The Latin."

'Nonsense," said the Judge as he adjusted wonderse," said the Judge as he adjusted the gold-rimmed eyeglasses on his nose. "You wouldn't be any better off if you had taken them. Ingersoll says— the Judge was fond of quoting Ingersoll—"Ingersoll says: "Thousands of men go to college and get a certificate that they have an education and that certificate is in Line with the same transfer of the same transfer that they have an education and that certificate is in Latin, and they stop studying, and in two years to save their life they couldn't read the certificate they've got. If you'd gone to college the chances are about this time you'd be starting on a long and dusty hunt for something to do, instead of being well started on your career as you are. Now, here is a sentence," running his pencil through a few words, "that I think I'll have to modify, and here," writing a few words, "is a place where a long the only recreation he had allowed himself since coming to Excelsior. He loved that long easy gallop over the rolling swells the feeling of the free wild wind on his brow, a wind that stung often like the lash of a whip.

At these times he was no longer Warfield, the man of action, who had won his way by sheer force of personality, pluck and endurance, but Gene, the dreamer, who held that the solution of the life-problem would ultimately prove to

"Well, that is the best I can do for you. It isn't well to polish too much, it's the rough surface that sticks, and holds the public attention. I think that's all the revising it needs. About the most curious instance of speech revising I ever knew of happened when I was a member of the North Dakota Legislature. Did I ever tell you about that, Gene?"

"No, Judge, I can't say you ever did. Let's have it!" "Well, that is the best I can do for you. It isn't well to polish too much, it's the rough surface that sticks, and holds the public attention. The Judge took out a cigar, chewed the end of it reflectively a moment and began:

"It happened as I said, when I was a member of the North Dakota Legislature, or rather the senate of that body. There was a character from somewhere up in the north part of the state, a good old soldier with a wooden leg whom we called Colonel. How the Colonel ever got elected was a mystery to him as well as to the legislature and its associates, but elected he was and the one consuming ambition of his existence was to make a speech. elected he was and the one consuming ambition of his existence was to make a speech. The opportunity never seemed to present itself till someone from his county petitioned to have a game law passed. This appealed to the Colonel and he made a speech and such a speech! After it was over the Colonel walked over to the reporter's desk and complained he wasn't quite satisfied with it. The Colonel had gotten onto the fact that this reporter—he has since become famous as a novelist—had revised gotten onto the fact that this reporter—he has since become famous as a novelist—had revised some other speeches. At any rate the Colonel asked him if he could give an hour or so to the revision of his speech, and laid a ten dollar bill on the corner of the desk, stating something about people not being expected to work for just the pleasure of it. The reporter saw the ten and told him he could. The next day the Colonel's speech in full appeared in the local press. It was a glorious day for the Colonel. Then the reporter helped him draft a bill and the bill came up for its first reading the following day.

"A newspaper man was reading clerk in the senate and he heard the speech, heard the Colonel cry and felt with him his anguish. I don't know just why, but something prompted the fellow in the reading of the bill next day to add on a few words which read something like this: 'Be it enacted etc., that it shall be unlawful during certain periods to shoot buffalo, geese, (wild) etc.,' incorporating quite a list of game and then adding, 'fish, tadpoles, cows and craps.' About this period in the proceedings the senate broke out in hilarious uproar despite the vigorous rapping of the Lieutenant Governor.

"The Colonel's heart was broken. Getting up on his one limb and stamping vigorously with the stump of the other, he said in loud and not too modest tones that there wasn't anything in his bill prohibiting the 'shooting of craps.' This, of course, was the added fuel necessary to cause a complete collapse of the senate and they adjourned amid wild uproars and hearty congratulations for the Colonel both upon his speech and his bill." The Judge paused and Warfield paid tribute to the story by a hearty laugh.

"What, you are not going yet!" he exclaimed as the Judge arose and lit his cigar.

"Yes, I promised to do a little commission for my wife. Now where, I wonder, did I put that piece of cloth—" feeling his vest pockets—"Oh, yes, here it is. She wants a pair of gloves to match an especially fetching costume she is to wear to a blowout up at the Huston's this evening, and if I don't get the right shade—"he broke off with a comical gesture of dismay, then went on: "It is a reception given in honor of Mrs. Huston's sister-in-law, Mrs. Moore, widow of the late General Moore, and her daughter Miss Victoria of Washington, D. C. The daughter is said to be a great beauty. You've been invited, I suppose?"

"Yes," said Gene with a touch of annoyance, "and that reminds me that I meant to have sent regrets, and I haven't and now it is too late, and I'll be expected to attend. What a bore!"

"Nonsense. Warfield, it isn't natural in one

"Nonsense, Warfield, it isn't natural in one soll says: 'The grandest ambition any man can possibly have is to so live and so improve himself in heart and brain as to be worthy of the love of some splendid woman.' Take my advice, young man. Array yourself in purple and fine linen and go to the party." And so saying, the Judge opened the door and tramped away down the corridor.

CHAPTER IV.

MEETING WITH VICTORIA.

Gene went over to the telephone and ordered his horse brought from the stable, mounted and rode slowly out of town. As he passed along he nodded to several acquaintances and along he nodded to several acquaintances and once he stopped for a few minutes' chat with an old countryman he met on the way. His horse, a big Kentucky-bred chestnut, carried him swiftly over the ground, and once beyond the thickly-settled, farming district he struck out across the open prairie.

We see through our telescopes giant balls of vapor resolving themselves into flery planets, cooling down until they become fit to bring forth life, then growing cold and rigid, finally floating like black and battered hulks across the sea of space; we know, too, that when the last faint spark has expired they will fall in upon their central sun and the whole dead mass thus regaining heat will rearise in blinding, bewildering mist and the whole process of evolution will be repeated over again, but the meaning of all this turmoil we strive in vain to solve. Is it, as Fiske has said, that through countless zons of time the last consummate work of Creation, the Human Soul might be wrought? This alone we know: Above all, and beyond all, there is a Fate, mighty, compelling, and strive against it as we may, which sweeps us onward like the dust before the wind. The atom Man, who fondly imagines himself the lord of his little day, what power has he against the force of Fate? Am I to live always in the memory-haunted cells of the past? Is there for me no sweet woman waiting—somewhere? The Judge was right. I have shunned women—andyet I long for love—my nature craves it as the flower craves the sunlight. Yes, I have shunned women. I have put down with resolute hand the passions which would have interfered with the accomplishment of my ambition. My ambition! Here again Fate steps in to my undoing. Once more a power that is stronger than I confronts me. Corcoran! That man of might! He comes to see me tomorrow, and I did not tell my old friend—for the first time in my life I felt vulpine and furtive. Corcoran! Will he conquer me, or shall I use him as a stepping-stone to reach—" He broke off suddenly and stood silently gazing out across the prairie. He had prated of fatality but he did not know even then Fate was bearing down upon him in the

"What a splendid horsewoman!" he thought, and then he shuddered as he added: "But at what a tremendous pace they are coming—the ground is uneven hereabouts,—if there should be a misstep——" The words had scarcely left his lips when the expected happened, for as the horse drew opposite him it stepped into a gopherhole, swerved, lurched sidewise and came down to the ground.

Horrifled, Gene rushed to the spot, but great was his surprise to see a tall handsome young woman rise lightly from the side of the fallen horse and stand calmly ragarding him.

In that flashing glimpse Gene saw a pair of magnetic blue eyes, and hair of an auburn so darkly bright it shone blood-red against the whiteness of the fair face it framed.

"Are you hurt?" Gene inquired anxiously.

"No, but I think my horse is." She was perfectly cool as she said this, only her slightly accelerated breathing betraying any agitation,

A glance at her smiling lips which had not lost a tithe of their rich color assured Gene she was uninjured, and he turned his attention to the horse which was making frantic efforts to get on its feet, only to fall back each time. After a careful inspection he announced

"Your horse is badly injured. The poor brute has broken his shoulder."

"It can't be helped," she rejoined coolly.

"Take your gun, please, and put him out of his misery."

Gene's face

"My gun! I never carry one." Gene's face was a picture of astonishment.
"You haven't one?" She arched her finely penciled brows. "Then take mine." And from among the folds of her well-fitting riding habit she draw out a silver-mounted devringer and she drew out a silver-mounted derringer and held it out to him in a small, gauntleted hand. An odd sensation came over Warfield. The thought of inflicting death on anything was repugnant to him. He made no move to take the weapon, but said temporizingly:

"He is such a beautiful animal it is a pity to kill him. Maybe if a vetrinary..."

"He is such a beautiful animal it is a pity to kill him. Maybe if a veterinary—"
"No use," she cut him short, "if his shoulder is broken. He would always be lame, and no one could expect me to ride a lame horse. If you are afraid to do it," she looked daringly at him, "stand aside and I'll shoot him, myself!" And she half turned as if to put the threat into

"Go over there," he said authoritatively, pointing to a little dip in the land, "and stand with your back to me!"

She gave him a look which seemed to carry with it a challenge, then her eyes drooped and she meekly obeyed.

Bending over the prostrate animal it required the exertion of all his will to steady his hand when he caught the look of almost human pain in the beautiful eyes upraised to his; there was a blinding flash, a few struggles, and the poor brute was dead.

He was pale when he rejoined her.

"I have killed your horse as you bade me," he said shortly.

"I knew you would," she said, "but there is another thing you can do for me. My saddle—it is one I fancy, and it is possible I may not be able to get another that will suit me as well—take it off, please, and I can send out tomorrow and have it brought in." This was said with the precision of a military general giving an order on the battlefield. an order on the battlefield.

Her coolness had an odd sort of fascination for Gene, and at the same time her seeming heartlessness—for she expressed never a word of regret or pity for the noble animal—repelled

"Is she utterly devoid of sentiment," he thought, "or is it that she possesses such perfect control over her nerves she will not exhibit any feeling?" It pleased him to think the letter

"Certainly," he said, "I will take the saddle off for you." And without further words he obeyed the order.

When he came back she took a bit of pasteboard from a tiny chatelaine that hung at her belt.

"We ought to be introduced," she said, "and in the absence of Mrs. Grundy perhaps this will serve," and she held out the card.

Miss Victoria Moore,
Washington, D. C.

As he read the name a flash of intelligence was conveyed to his mind.

"You are the young lady visiting at Mr. and Mrs. Huston's," he said as he offered one of his business cards.
Glancing at the card she regarded him earnestly. During the past week she had heard much of this Eugene Warfield. Around her uncle's dinner table she had heard him discussed as a possible candidate for Congress.

as a possible candidate for Congress.

"You have guessed rightly," she rejoined,
"but the question now arises, how is that young lady to get back to Excelsior?"

"You will have to ride my horse." And as he spoke he looked about for the animal.

he spoke he looked about for the animal.

The horse had run away at the sound of the pistol, but had come back and was standing over the dead one regarding it strangely.

Warfield easily caught the chestnut.

"Can you—"he said diffidently—"can you ride this kind of a saddle?"

"Can I?" she echoed. "Yes, I rather think I can. But you—what are you going to do?"

"I can walk," he said airily. The prospect of a ten-mile tramp had no terrors for him at that moment.

a ten-mile tramp had no terrors for him at that moment.

"Nonsense! you would be half the night getting back. There is really no need of your walking," with a critical glance at the chest-nut, "your horse is big and strong, and if he will carry double we can both ride."

Her promptness took Gene's breath away but he rallied quickly.
"So we can," he said with an admiring look at her beautiful face, "and I'm sure I shall be delighted. Will you take the saddle, or would you prefer—"
"Yes," she replied with alacrity, "I will. I always like to lead in the procession."
"I believe you do," he said with a hearty laugh. "I think you are one that wouldn't want to take a back seat—anywhere."

Victoria affected mirth and Warfield was startled as her voice fell upon his ear, it was so soft, so musical, such a gurgling ripple of sweet sounds.

sweet sounds.

He helped her into the saddle doing it very badly, Victoria thought, but did not say so—and then mounted behind her and they set off at a smart pace.

There was little conversation on the homeward ride. Gene blamed himself for his stupidity and thought of a lot of brilliant things he might have said—the next day. Nevertheless, the silence was potent.

The very consciousness of her physical nearness held Gene tongue-tied, and besides, there was so much for him to see.

First of all there was that lovely curling hair that coiled and uncoiled itself; there was a dainty shell-like ear and behind it a little half circle of white flesh—Gene thought there was but one skin in the world that could compare with it for whiteness—and below this a soft full throat; then as she balanced herself sidewise with marvelous grace, considering the difficulty of riding a man's saddle in that position, her profile was turned to him showing the outline of a pink cheek and red lips softly parted; her figure was a trifle large—in after years it might become gross—but just now it was the perfection of womanly beauty. As he looked at all this the savage instinct awoke in Gene. A thrill pulsed through his half circle of white flesh-Gene thought there as he looked at all this the savage instinct awoke in Gene. A thrill pulsed through his veins. The hunter's blood stirred and he was conscious of a passionate desire to seize that lovely breathing woman in his arms and kiss those red lips so perilously near.

He resisted the impulse, but the thought was in his mind, and somehow, it came back to him afterward.

As for Victoria, she was not greatly gifted

As for Victoria, she was not greatly gifted as a conversationalist and on the present occasion she said even less than usual. She was, in point of fact, doing some serious thinking. Although her years numbered but twenty-two, Victoria Moore was a thorough woman of the world. The Moores had formerly been people of considerable wealth, but during Victoria's childhood there had been a crash in the business world and nearly all their fortune had vanished. had vanished.

Victoria's mother was a proud woman and to have dropped down from the position she held would have broken her heart. By sundry makeshifts, not all of them as honorable as

ARCH is here, and we are marching into the New Year at a great pace. Only the other day the New Year was born, just a bald-headed infant not a day old. Today the New Year is running around in long pants, and wearing chin whiskers, and sporting a plug hat. That shows that Time is fast and ever flying, and before long the baby year will be bent with age, and marked with wrinkles and dying in the snows of Winter. I want you to make good use of your Time, with a capital T., as it is the most precious thing you possess. Get up and do something and be somebody. Don't be a bump on a log, and for Heaven's sake, think once in a while. You all have brains, but only about one fifth of your brain capacity is ever used—the other four fifths might just as well be fried, put on toast, and served to the cat. Now that is so, and I know it, because I read your letters. The trouble is that no one but your Uncle Charlie dare tell you the truth, but I dare, and I am just going to do some straight talking this year to most of you. It is straight talking the world wants, but those who are paid to talk, and paid to write, are so mortally afraid of treading on somebody's toes, that they only deal in mushy platitudes that do no good, and puts people to sleep. I have got the biggest audience of any living man wielding a pen. I'm mighty glad to say that, but at the same time, that statement implies a tremendous responsibility, and if I don't make good use of the privilege bestowed upon me, and shake you up once in a while, God is going to shake me up later on for neglecting my duty. I want you to remember that all of you have brains, hearts, and souls. I want you to remember that you are expected to make the hear wegethle nee of these three things. want you to remember that all of you have brains, hearts, and souls. I want you to remember that you are expected to make the best possible use of these three things. You have a brain to think with, a heart to feel with, and a soul to save. Remember that life at the best is a very short affair (the average is about forty years for all of us) and then the curtain falls on life's drama and we go elsewhere. Most of us live as though we expected to buzz around on this earth for nine billion years, and the only God or ideal that we have is the dollar. That is bad enough, but the worst-of it is this dollar-chasing turns the hand of everyone of us against his neighbor, and our neighbor against us. It turns that brain that should be full of sublime thoughts, and lofty ideals, into an adding machine and a hand of everyone of us against his neighbor, and our neighbor against us. It turns that brain that should be full of sublime thoughts, and lofty ideals, into an adding machine and a cash register. It makes that heart that ought to be throbbing with love, a stony abode of hate and malice, and as for the soul—well, it dries that into husk.

Now all of you, do for Heaven's sake get a wiggle on you, and do something worth while during the little space allotted you on this planet. The fly is born in summer, he buzzes around and tickles bald heads, annoys everybody, spreads diseases, and dies of his own gluttony in the molasses barrel, or cream pitcher, and that is the end of him. There are a lot of humans that live just such lives as the fly. They buzz around, lying, drinking, blaspheming, they don't work, they eat up good victuals others provide, spread disease and ruin, and finally they die victims of their own drunken and dissolute habits. Let me ask you, who belong to this League—boys especially—how many of you are going to imitate the fly, and go to your graves with nothing but a life of wrong-doing, gluttony, debauchery as your contribution to the world's uplifting? Now wake up—shake up—all of you. Get a new set of ideas—read—think; yes, for God's sake use your brain capacity and THINK. Think how you can improve your friends and neighbors, so they'll improve. Set a good example to your associates, be kind and helpful, and be thoughtful. We don't need to die to go to Heaven. We'll have Heaven on earth, as well as beyond the grave, as soon as you, everyone of you use your brain capacity

We'll have Heaven on earth, as well as beyond the grave, as soon as you, everyone of you, use your brain capacity to its fullest, and THINK, your Heart capacity to its fullest, and LOVE, your soul capacity to its fullest, and get filled with noble thoughts and lofty ideals. The latter is the part of you that is immortal—the part of you that lives on after that precious carcass you pamper and pet. carcass you pamper and pet, has been a luncheon for worms. TEPIC, TEPIC TY., MEXICO, Dec. 9, 1906.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE AND COUSINS:

I will write you a letter from Mexico, it being the first I ever wrote to the cousins. I hope it will be interesting to you all.

This city has about 15,000 population, consisting of Mexicans and Spanish-speaking people. Recently the electric lights were installed here for streets and dwelling illumination; one step toward American methods, you see, in progress. There is a government telegraph system also here that is used to send any telegrams one wishes to any part of the could to the toward of the could be a superior of the could be superior of the could be a superior of the could be superior of the superior

Willie, your letter is a great treat, and I've enjoyed it im-mensely, and I am sure all the other cousins have done the same. I'm particularly interested in the siesta business, as it explains an extraordinary condition of affairs that I never before understood. I was in old Mexico myself some years ago, and I'd been eating a bunch of green bananas, and I felt as though I had swallowed a barber shop, and I felt as though I had swallowed a barber shop, and swanowed a parper snop, and all the razor pushers were trying to cut their way out. The perspiration was dripping from my brow in streams that would have irrigated the Sahara Desert, and made Death Valley blossom like a rose. I reached blossom like a rose. I reached a drug store on the stroke of twelve, and just as I was about to enter the physic shop, a great fat greaser slammed the door in my face, and said, "See Esther!" I said, "I don't want to see Esther, I want to see two doctors, and a three-gallon doctors, and a three-gallon. doctors, and a three-gallon jar of Jamaica ginger!" "See Esther!" he growled

The nights are delightfully cool, and require a light blanket for covering do they? Willie, I'd like to see you covering the cool nights with a light blanket. You must need a big blanket for a job like that. Eggs at four cents, that is pretty stiff. The hen can't be very busy at that rate, or prices would be lower. Maybe the hens are so busy seeing Esther, that they don't have time to lay. Anyway, Willie, we thank you for your lovely letter, and please give my love to Esther, and tell her to wake up.

MINDEN MINES, Mo., Dec. 12, 1906.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:
I received my membership card and button O. K. and am well pleased with them. I am seventeen years old and have worked in the coal mines for three years, and read Comport every month, and like it very much. Minden Mines is not a very big town but has its share of saloons and wholesale liquor houses. I do not drink liquor or use tobacco in any form. I have no pets except a dog and a cat. W. L. PAGE (No. 19,39).

Willie, they had no right to put you to work in the coal mines when you were only fourteen. I hope the state of Missouri will pass a law prohibiting the employment of children under sixteen, in coal mines. The way children are put to work in mines and factories in this country is enough to call down the vengeance of Almighty God on this republic. There are two millions of children under the age of fourteen who are being chained to the wheels of remorseless industrialism. Their young lives are blighted and ruined, and their very souls crushed out of them to pile up the dollars for conscienceless employers. Think of this when you sing "Star Spangled Banner," and let off firecrackers on the Fourth of July to celebrate our Independence. Independence we whether the postal of those peaches, and I want to tell you that that was the only desert I had for my Christmas dinner. I ate the postal card with the picture of the peaches, and it was just dandy. If you have any more canned peach postal cards, send them at once, and if you have any of the $35 you got from the sale of those peaches you can send that, too. If the peaches taste as well as their pictures, they must have been dandy peaches. If I had only have any of that turkey I might have been dandy peaches. If I had only and their very souls crushed out of them to pile up the dollars for conscienceless employers. Think of this when you sing "Star Spangled Banner," and let off firecrackers on the Fourth of July to celebrate our Independence. of this when you sing "Star Spangled Banner," and let off firecrackers on the Fourth of July to celebrate our Independence. Independence — rubbish—what sort of independence have two million child slaves? It is a national sin, a national disgrace, that this proud republic should permit this atrocious crime against poor defenceless children. We have the worst and most inhuman child labor laws of any nation calling itself civilized. Our national conceit is so great, we are blind to our sinful shortcomings. When we turn the lifeblood of our children into dollars we are a nation of criminals and hypocrites, not a nation of Christians. Thank God public sentiment is being aroused on this point and President Roosevelt is aiding the National Committée of Child Labor in its efforts to put through a National Child Labor Law that will protect the helpless little ones. We waged the bloodiest war of history to free the black slaves, and then went right to work and made slaves of our helpless white children, so that we might have a few more dollars coming into the house, and bigger dividends on investments. We want another Abraham Lincoln to free our child slaves, and God grant he may come soon. We prate about giving our children an educahave a lew more dollars coming into the house, and bigger dividends on investments. We want another Abraham Lincoln to free our child slaves, and God grant he may come soon. We prate about giving our children an education. Education—rubbish—not three in a hundred of those who go to school ever get through High School, and anything short of a High School graduation is only the mockery of an education. As I said before, we don't use our brain capacity—not a fifth or fiftieth part of it. We build magnificent schools, and that satisfies the national conscience, but the children who should be in these schools, are forced into mines, factories, field and sweat shop before they get an education. Our legislators know all these facts, but they won't do anything, because it would hurt cotton and coal dividends, and they would rather crush out the life of a million children than have a million dollars lost in dividends. The Isrælites of old sacrificed bullocks and animals to God on their altars. We sacrifice our children on an altar of gold, in our blind worship of the great and pitliess God Almighty Dollar.

Now that I've had my say on a topic on which I feel deeply, and which I have sworn to do my level best to remedy, and which you can help to remedy by writing to your State senators and representatives, your congressmen and assemblymen, it is in the power of everyone of you to help alter this condition, so do your part, and do it at once.

Now, Willie, please tell us why your papa fights chicken. Why don't he fight somebody his own size. It is no credit to any man to fight a live chicken. I've waged many a battle with a dead one, but I'll be jiggered if I could be paid to fight a live chicken. What weapon with a dead one, but I'll be jiggered if I could be paid to fight a live chicken. What weapon with a dead one, but I'll be jiggered if I could be paid to fight a live chicken. What weapon does your Pop use when he goes into the ring for a scrap with the chickens. Willie, I am shocked to hear you say that you read most all the time that you're not working. Who is it spreads those false reports about you? It must be intensely annoying to pick up the paper, and there read all the time that you are not working. I suppose the report runs thus: "We regret to say that our distinguished fellow citizen, Willie Page, is not working today." When a man reads all the time that he is not working, it surely must discredit him in the eyes of the community. What's that, Toby? You say I am all off on the wrong pike, and that Willie means that he spends his leisure hours in reading? Thank you, Toby, for your correction, but I am not here to guess what people say, I'm here to take them at their word. I am also here to denounce a merciless system

We also have the Orphans' Home.

NORTH DUMPLING LIGHT HOUSE,
FISHERS ISLAND, N. Y., Nov. 23, 1906.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:
I wonder if you or any of the cousins ever lived in a light house? As I have never seen any letters from any of the cousins living in one, I thought I would write. I am living on a little island, in a light house, called North Dumpling light house. It is three and a half miles from the main land, and sometimes it is a week before we can get ashore. I have lived on this one dumpling for nearly twelve years, and there is enough of it left for Uncle Charlie to live on it for twelve years longer. I would like to hear from all cousins living in a light house and I will answer all letters. If I see this in print will write again and tell you more about this place. Your loving niece,
Miss Annie Fowlers, (No. 11,990).

Annie, I am ever so glad to hear from you,

Miss Annie Fowler, (No. 11,990).

Annie, I am ever so glad to hear from you, and I'd give anything if you'd send us a picture of your light house. Oh, yes, I know all about light houses. I lived in a light house once. It was out in Kansas, and I never knew how light that house was until one night there was something doing in the wind line out on the prairie. I did not have time to skiddoo to the cyclone cellar before old "Si" hit that two-story frame a biff in the slats that sent it whizzing at a ninety-mile-an-hour gait through space. Here was a house doing the balloon act, and flying like a bird with sixteen wings, and it flew and flew until it couldn't flew any flewer. After traveling several hundred thousand miles, it flopped down on terra firma to take a short rest. It did not rest long, however, as the wind got busy again, and there was I holding that house down, sitting on the roof, and clinging to it for dear life. It was the lightest house I ever saw until Mr. "Si" Clone quit business, and then you could not budge it with dynamite. No more light house for and clinging to it for dear life. It was the lightest house I ever saw until Mr. "Si" Clone quit business, and then you could not budge it with dynamite. No more light houses for me, though. I have a friend who has gone light housekeeping, but the other night when I called on him, there was not a light in the place. My friend explained to me that his wife and he had an oil stove, a couple of crackers, and a cent's worth of pickles, and that was what they called light housekeeping. Queer ideas some people have, don't they? Annie, I think it is absurd to have a light house on a storm-swept island. It is more than absurd, it is criminal foolishness. Give that old light house away and get a heavy thouse, or some of these cold days you'll be careening over the billows, bound for nowhere, and going there fast, and a watery grave will be the end of your promising career. I lived in another light house once It had sixty-two windows on the parlor floor, twice as many on the ceiling, and Heaven knows how many on the sides. That was indeed a light house. Fancy, Annie says she has lived on one dumpling for twelve years. That's tough diet, even Toby would kick at that. Annie, if your light house gets too light, put the dumpling on the top of it, that will hold it steady for a while.

Our next letter is a thriller and no mistake.

Newman, Stanislaus Co., Cal.

Dear Uncle Charlie:
Here is a maverick from California who wants to break into your circle.
In Feb. 1899, my regiment landed and took possession of Iloilo, Panay Island a little island about three hundred miles South of Manila.
I was put on guard the first thing, and as I was a raw recruit, my first time on guard, I felt that I was just a little better and of more importance than the President of the United States. In the evening, I was notified that my post was to be changed, and that I was to be placed on out post duty. Then I did throw out my chest. I took my post at six in the evening and stayed there until eight; it was about half a mile from town, and on a road that led down to the beach. On one side of the road was a thick forest of palm trees over grown with vines, and on the other side was an old abandoned convent, surrounded by a high cocina wall. The big wooden doors or gate had long since rotted and fallen down, and through this gate could be seen the court, all a mass of palm trees and matted vines. A more God forsaken spot I never saw.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

Crit Truman and his assistant, Ralph Dayton are called from New York to Chicago, by the Chief of Police to assist in suppressing crime. The leader is variously described, and one asserts he has a harelip. For a moment the men are silent, then the well-trained minds recall the recapture of "The Man with Many Aliases," Jim Holines, Chris Dougherty, and the blow which splits him from the nostril to his mouth, and which, when healed, might pass for a harelip. "How is our work?" asks Crit. "Are the officials satisfied with the return of the money?" They ought to prosecute Percy Mandeville; he has the making of a confirmed oriminal. There are several cases in their line. There's a missing girl and a jewelry robbery on Fifth Ave., but they can be left for a few days. Truman makes up his mind to catch this man who twice escapes, and he tells Ralph to wire the Police, get Peter, and we'll outline a general plan.

Percy Mandeville calls to see Sylvia Lyster; she tells him the call must be final. He insists she emocarages him. She calls a servant to show him out. Sylvia, befriending Kathle Mandeville, condices to her that her husband makes a proposal of marriage to her. Sylvia still loves her husband. Custer Quex is engaged to Sylvia; he will go to her at night. It's the last happy afternoon he has for many a long day. While Crit and Ralph are on the way to Chicago, the former has a telegram. "Percy Mandeville disappeared. Think he went to Chicago. Took Sylvia Lyster with him," signed by the President of the bank. It's the girl, whose people wants Crit to look up. The Chief of Police tells Crit of a hold-up in a saloon, a month previous. Four guys, all masked, line the customers up—nothing is overlooked—even a pair of diamond ouff buttons is taken. As they semerge from City Hall they are joined by Peter, who is waiting. He tells Truman, Jim Hollis. Ralph and Peter four names, although only twenty, who is in for "dipping." Truman "sweats" him and asks him, "Do you want to know how the sage there is instant confusion. Crit Truman in the guise of "Hung-eye" John enters, and fakes his escape from Joliet.

Custer Quex receives a letter from Sylvia Lyster. She loves him still, but from the moment he receives this letter she will be as the dead to him. The lover declares he will search the world until he finds her.

Crit Truman talks with the warden of Joliet penetentiary, and finding that "Hang-eye" John is serving sentence exacts a promise to keep outsiders from communicating with the warden for a few days. He conceals the disguise of "Hang-eye" John. Christie Ferris leads Truman into a trap. Without waiting to be caught he leaps out of danger. He assumes the disguise, and entering a saloon sees Christie Ferris, who drinks water. A crook who will keep from drinking brandy after putting a man, where he did me, is under Jim Hollis, Truman reasons. Ferris produces the hat Truman leaves. The barkeeper utters a terrible oath. Truman follows Ferris and hears him tell "Four-time" Jim that he "dropped" Crit Truman. He hears the low cry and earnest pleading of a girl. She comes out. Crit Truman offers assistance and tells her to go to the number on the card. The girl hurries away and Crit slips back into the hall. He hears Jim Hollis order Ferris to tell "Fake" Pete and "Snow-flake" Mike to bring Mandeville there. Crit Truman borne away in triumph by "Fake" Pete and "Snow-flake" Mike, the last two supporting Mandeville.

CHAPTER XI.

A STRANGE SITUATION.

HIS case was to be a war of wits, that Crit knew from the beginning, but he believed, and truly, that he was the match for any criminal, however quick-witted he might be.

"In the first place, I'm in the right," he contended, "and in the second place, I'm willing to back myself against Jim Hollis, 'The Man with Many Aliases,' or any other crook."

So far his playing had taken every trick, but he well knew the extremely dangerous game he was playing.
"A man's life is the stake," he thought, even as he was enthusiastically escorted by the crooks he had met in his assumed character of "Hang-eye" John.

he was cannot have the many control of the could fool that astute criminal, he would not walk so openly along the Chicago streets, but then he appreciated how well he was protected by men who would go to any length to save him from recapture, or rather the man they deemed their friend.

The men were jubilant, and kept saying:

"What will Four-time" say?

Orit was wondering a little himself. If he could fool that astute criminal, he knew it would be easy sailing, but could he do it?

As he passed, the great detective recognized his Crit also indicated to Peter to follow the little Crit also indicated to Peter to follow the little procession. These detectives have certain signals, a regular code, so they can communicate with each other without anyone being at all the wiser. Of course Balph did not know why. Crit wanted him to go to Fifty-fifth street boulevard to Mrs. Haddam, but he started there immediately. His work

Peter, skillfully concealing the fact that he was following, kept up with the gang until it came within a block of the place in which "The Man with Many Aliases" had hidden himself.

"We'd better separate," "Fake" Pete suggested, and the rest agreed.

"Fake" went with Crit, and to the latter's delight, and a palgestically:

"Fake" went with Crit, and to the latter's delight, said half apologetically:
"We had to make a few changes, so I'd better go ahead," and "Fake" appeared in his every-day suit.
"Sure." Crit replied cheerfully. He wondered how he would have managed if he had been requested to take the lead.

He had thought the way a complicated one when he followed Ferris, but the way he and his guide went in and out, through tunnels, damp and sweating with ville moisture, sagging to a danger point; through one passageway which was a huge pipe, magended between two halidings, about tens see apart. They ascended and descended countless numbers of stairs; opened door after door, which although old, were lined with iron, and furnished with dead locks. At last, after an unusually long climb, "Fake" put a key in a lock, turned it, and flinging open the door, said dramatically:

"Welcome, John, to your own!" and Crit found himself standing in one of the most luxuriously furnished rooms he had ever been in. It was lighted from above by a huge skylight. If there had been any windows they were filled and covered, but there could be no fault found with either light or ventilation. The floor was covered with a priceless velvet carpet; the walls were hung with masterpieces, and the furniture was worth a fortune. Here and there gleasmed a marble estates, and coetly bits of chims, showing that someone with taste presided over these apartments, and opening from this central room, which was as large as an ordinary-sized hall, were saif-a-dozen rooms.

He had barely time to take this in, when he heard a voice he well knew say:

"Welcome, indeed!" and he saw before him the sinister, yet in a way trandsome, face of Jim Holits, who had sworn never to be taken alive.

It was the same o'd face, a little more worn; a triffe more reckless, and strangely marred by the swend which had cleft the upper lip, and yet the same criminal whom he was going to take back to just punishment, even if he lost his life in so doing. Jim Hollis held out his hand, and Crit unhesitatingly pisced his own within it. "Hang-eye" John had a peculiar grip. It had been given to Crit one time by a dying confederate of this same criminal, and he had practiced it. Possibly, he counted more on the effect of this same criminal, and he had practiced it. Possibly, he counted more on the effect of this grip than anything else. He also knew the answering grip, which those in the confidence of "Hang-eye" returned.

A great deal hung on that moment. If Jim Hollis to see these two boys, Ferris and Crit felt that a special providence had suggested his disguise.

"My plans are without end, and I think we can retire after a time, if we can be sure that Crit Truman is out of the way."

"Then you think there may be a doubt?"

"He's come out of so many tight places in such remarkable ways, that I will not feel sure of him until I see his body. Think I will have the pit dragged for his body. Think I will have the pit dragged for his body. If we find it, all right and good, but if we don't, then I'll know that Crit has been too much for us again, that's all."

Crit could not help wishing that Jim Hollis displayed more confidence in his confederates.

However, he settled himself to listen to a long list of disbolical plans, each one of which seemed a little worse than the other, and at last he fairly gasped:

"Where did you get them?"

"In here," Jim Hollis said with a laugh, laying one long, sleader finger on his right temple, "but let's go into the Turkish bath. I've had some extensive improvements made especially in there, for it's worth money in our pockets to have a place if the this to use in straightening out a fellow."

Aiways watching, and yet never displaying any undue enthusiasm or keenness of manner Crit followed where he was led, and had to admit that the room which the oreok had prepared was perfect of its kind.

Laughing, the two men watched Mandeville inthe terrible heat, and engrossed as he was in the scene, Crit Truman was off his guard. His disguise was perfect in a normal atmosphere, but subjected to the heat and humidity, the pigments began to run, and just as Crit suddenly became aware of this terrible fact, "The Grafter" came in saying excitedly:

"No one went into that pit today."

"Then Crit Truman is on the loose," said Jim Hollis, turning towards the supposed "Hang-eye" John. He stood with his eyes bungling, his mouth half open. Buddenly he gave a terrible cry and sprung forward. Mandeville not fully recovered, was standing in front of the supposed "Hang-eye" John.

forward. Mandeville not fully recovered, was standing in front of the supposed "Hang-eye" John.

"Lads, this is Crit Truman!" he cried, and the men who had adored at the shrine of their presumed criminal associate, turned menacing faces toward the disguised detective.

Too late Crit realized how foolish had been his step in entering this place full of heat and steam. He knew his frightful danger. Here he was copped up with some of the most desperate men in the country, to whom the worst of crimes were as nothing. They knew him in his true character; feared him, and had already tried to murder him. Another thing. They all prided themselves on their astuteness, and it was no little blow to their pride to realize how he had completely pulled the wool over their eyes, when he had made them believe he was "Hang-eye" John.

Still Crit never flinched, but smiled back at Jim Hollis as the latter said through clenched teeth:

"I don't know, Jim. So far I have managed to do pretty well in getting ahead of you. My hand has always been a bit better than yours, although you do try to stand pat."

"You talk this way when you are breathing your very last breath?" said Jim Hollis, "The Man with Many Aliases," cried looking like a fiend as he spoke.

A SAD STORY AND A TELEGRAM.

In the meanwhile Ralph, obeying the instructions of his superior, boarded a Cottage Grove Avenue car, and in due time reached the home of Mrs. Haddam, where to his satisfaction, Ralph found a very grateful, although somewhat incoherent girl.

"Then it was Mr. Truman, himself, who directed me here?" the girl asked eagerly.

"I suppose so," Ralph returned, thinking her one of the sweetest girls heever saw.

"And you are a great detective, too?"

"I am Ralph Dayton, detective, "Ralph said reddening a little, he scarcely knew why.

"Yes."

"Did you ever hear of the Lysters?"
Raiph looked up. quickly. He remembered the name very well, and knew that Mr. Lyster had applied to Crit Truman to have a search made for his missing daughter, Sylvia.

"Yes, I know Mr. Lyster," he returned, his eyes fixed upon the bright, girlish face.
"Then, I want to tell you something, Mr. Dayton, I am Sylvia Lyster."
Had a bullet struck Ralph he could not have been more stunned, for he had heard the girl's story of her rescue by Crit, although she did not tell how she came to be in a position requiring Crit's intervention.

"Miss Lyster, your father is searching for you, and is almost broken-hearted."

"I know it," the girl replied, her head drooping.
"He asked us to take the case of looking for you, but I told Mr. Truman that from the facts given me it did not seem to be worth while," Ralph continued.

Suddenly "Fake" cried:
"We've forgot the swell mug, his Nibbs that would treat the house."
"Hollis looked annoyed:
"Whore is he?" he asked savagely.
"In there," "Fake" said, pointing towards one of the more of the man he had come to the same later Percy Randeville came slouding into the presence of the man he had come to the fact present in the leader gave the command:

For a few moments the New York man was severely reprimsaded for getting on such a drunk, and then Hollis concluded with these words, which made Crit prick up his ears figuratively speaking:

"Now get to the Turkish bath and soak that drink out of you. I am going to institute a new lay, and I want you to be the lad to run it," and having concluded. Hollis turned on his heel, and "Rhowfake" took the young man off, evidently to help him get rid of his "load."

"That's one of the slickest crooks in this country, if he'd keep sober," Hollis said, addressing himself to Crit.

"Who is he?" Crit saked.

"His name is Percy Mandeville. For some time he was in a big bank, and he has helped himself to enough to beat Standard Oil. The fun is the old mug don't know how bad off they are. "Ain't it so? What job did any of you clear without me? Except, though, Ferris here."
"What's he done?" asked several.
"Did Crit Truman," Jim Hollis said grimly.
"Snowfiake" Mike looked a little serious.
"Did you see him drop?" he asked.
"Y-e-s," Ferris stammered.
"No lyin'. Did you see him?"
"I found his hat on the step."
"How did you leave him?"
"In the room all right. He was dead easy. I just pulled the trap, and den I went back and found dis," holding up Crit's hat.
"I think it's all right," Jim Hollis said coldly. "If Crit Truman was dropped into that hole, he's dead long before this, and the world is free from one of the hardest and most cruel men it has ever known," and Jim Hollis followed this statement by a string of horrible oaths.
Suddenly "Fake" seemed to remember something, and asked:
"Where's the girl"
Jim frowned:
"I sent her out a while ago."
"You're a fool!" "Fake" Pete said angrity.
"What"
"Yes, a fool, to send a young girl out alone in this part of the city, Ten to one she gets pinched. and

For the slightest part of a second, Crit could have heard his heart beat, for so much hung upon that one thing, then came the answering pressure, strong and hearty. For the time being Crit Truman had vanished, and "Hang-eye" John was in his place.

The excited men all clamored for a repetition of his wonderful story of "breaking jail" and Jim Hollis listened as delightedly as had the other crooks in the saloon.

"Glad you managed it," Jim said finally, "for there's an awful lot doin' and somehow I can't find anyone to help me. These guys are all right, but they can't work without a leader," and he gazed at the crowd, who had escorted the detective, all of whom were there.

shirt to warm him." After prescribing some medicine and toast, and warm milk, for a diet, he left me.

I kept that little monkey for nearly two years, and many is the time I have felt like wringing his neck, for he got me into all kinds of trouble after that, but his first was the worst of all. A recruit stepped on him one day, and that was the end of Mickey and my troubles. But for all of his bother I was very sorry for the little fellow, for he had been lots of company for me when I was away out on some lonely post, for he went with me everywhere, and I always carried him inside of my shirt, and whenever he got hungry, or wanted to play, he would begin to kick, scratch and squall for all he was worth.

Now, Uncle Charlie, I hope I haven't written too long a letter, but it is like this, I am away out here on a ranch and it is very lonesome, and I have nothing to read and hardly ever see anyone to talk to except the men that work here, so it is a pleasure for me to write letters.

Some time I will tell you of a little adventure I had down in Panama, unless you do not care to hear it.

Hoping to hear from some of the cousins, I will say good night.

HARRY, I certainly have enjoyed your letter; and I am very fond of soldier boys, as somebody's got to do the fighting, and I had rather you did it than me. I wish people would quit fighting anyway. Marion Hazel Bean (No. 16,225).

Hazel, your letter is charming, and I am so glad that you are not sensitive about the size of your pedal extremities, and are willing to let us gaze at them in all their redundant beauty. I have a very fair pair of props myself though they they are not quite as big as yours—say about two miles shorter, and about a mile less broad across. Anyway I have to sleep with my feet out of the window, when I go to bed, and I have let out the soles of my cockroach crushers for advertising purposes, and there is no room in the house for them anyway. On the bottom of one foot I have painted. "Send seven "subs." to Comfort and get Uncle Charlie's poems." The other foot I have let out to a pill company. They wanted to pay me fifty dollars a square foot for advertising space, but I told them they could not pay me by the square foot, as I had a long foot, so they pay me ten dollars an acre instead. Everybody that passes my hencoop has to see my feet, and the advertising brings me money, as the advertisers have to foot the bill. I should think Hazel dear that your feet are quite the biggest feeture of your section. Talking of feet I was that passes my hencoop has to see my feet, and the advertising brings me money, as the advertisers have to foot the bill. I should think Hazel dear that your feet are quite the biggest feeture of your section. Talking of feet I was in a circus once, and they had a mule that would only go in harness hitched up to a wagon. He had to see and feel a pair of shafts rubbing against his hide, or he'd kick the eyebrows off the man in the moon. Scores of people tried to ride the mule, and were taken to the hospital or the mulespital—I'm not sure which, both I think. Anyway at last I got on that old mule's back, and when he felt my feet rubbing against his carcass, and sticking out in front of his nose about sixteen feet, he just chortled with delight, and we galloped around the ring to the echoing plaudits of the assembled multitudes. I got my fifty and divvied up with the mule, who had a large family of poor relations, and needed the money. The mule thought that my feet were shafts. I should like to go to a dance with you, Hazel, but I don't think our feet could both dance at once. We might get a couple of big toes on the floor at the same time, but if we did, the company would have to dance on the roof. Our best plan would be to dance out of doors, and then we'd have to be careful, or we'd be tangling our pushers in the surrounding scenery. Never mind, Hazel about those poor little toots being only number eights. You are only eighteen years young, so there's lots of time for them to grow. Don't be disheartened or admit defeet. Keep up your heart, and maybe in ten years time you will have an 88 foot instead of an eight. A foot should be in proportion to the rest of the body, and Hazel is built on superb lines, is a veritable Juno, a Goddess of the Golden West, and her tootses are just the proper understanding for such a beautiful superstructure. Half the boys in America, I bet, would give their life to have the proud privilege of buying the casings for those toots—bet your boots they would. Hazel, my life is yours, and

Dear Uncle Charlie:

I write you now to inform you that at 6.30 P. M., Jan. 2nd, Herbert J. Hipple died. His number in the Comport League was 2,221.

I wish I could express in words, the pleasure that you and the League gave him. He so often spoke of you, and had you been his own Uncle Charlie, he could not have thought more of you.

Through the generosity of a man who signed himself Mr. Good, Herbert received a book, "Uncle Charlie's Poems," and that brought him many hours of pleasure.

Herbert was born at Whitestone, Queens Co., L. I., Aug. 3rd, 1888. When he reached the age of five years, we (his parents) noticed that he was weak in the back. We took him to a specialist, who recommended plaster of Parls jackets, which we had put on him, about every six weeks for more than five years. But it was no use, softening of the spine set in, and no relief could be obtained. He gradually got worse, and nine years ago was the last time he stood alone.

Since then he has been helpless, gradually getting weaker, but always had a very active and well-developed brain. He was taken sick a few days before Christmas, and died of pneumonia trouble.

Will you please notify members of the League of Cousins of his death, so they will not write him any more; we do not like to open his mail. If any of the League members care to write to his brother, and only companion (except his parents) we will be very well pleased. His brother's name is Walter, his League number is 10,495. Walter is in the same condition Herbert was at his age, and there being no relief for him, we wish to make things as pleasant and comfortable as we can for him, while he is with us, and I think if he heard from a League member once in a while he would be pleased.

Please pardon me for being so lengthy in this my first letter to you. Wishing you health and happiness, HARRY H. HIPPLE, (Herbert's father).

happiness, Harry H. Hippie, (Herbert's father).

Poor Herbert, I knew him best of all of the shut-ins, as he lived nearer to me than any other of the army of suffering ones who belong to our League. I never read more beautiful letters than he wrote; letters brimming over with cheerfulness, resignation, and content. He did not chafe or complain of the cross of affliction that was his to bear, but just accepted it as a matter of course, and bore it bravely and cheerfully until God called him to lay it down, and enter into the Land of Eternal Sunshine, where there are no plaster jackets to be worn. and enter into the Land of Eternal Sunshine, where there are no plaster jackets to be worn, or crosses to be carried. Herbert is now playing in the streets of the Holy City, thankful at last to be free of his bed of suffering and his aches and pains, and longing for his brother and parents to join him. Poor Herbert that was, Happy Herbert that is! It was hard to let him go, but who would have the heart to wish him to return? He knows now why his lot on earth was different from that of his companions who were blessed with health, and could run around and play while he could only lie still and suffer. It is all made clear to him now, and he knows that it was all for the best, and he is happy at last. To you who wrote him and cheered him on his bed of suffering let me ask, are you not, now that he is gone, thankful above all things that you tried to MRS. W. M. HEAL, Box 56, Fowlerton, Ind.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I am a Kentuckian. I am five feet six inches in height, one hundred and twenty-five pounds in weight, brown hair, gray eyes, and am nineteen years of age. I live on a large farm with my parents and brother. We live six miles from Crab Orchard the nearest railroad station, and twelve miles from Stanford the next nearest. I too, must say Comfort is the dearest paper I've yet seen. I have been a subscriber for two years, and will never be without it again. I'm a member of Uncle Charlie's family also, and like his witty replies.

I'll give a few suggestions which I hope will prove helpful to some of the sisters.

If you want a fine white face or hands, then take a slice of lemon and rub the face and hands every night before going to bed, and the first thing you do in the morning is to wash it off with hot water, afterward with cold water to close the pores, do this for about two weeks.

For stains of any kind on clothes, pour boiling hot water through, holding the cloth over a dish. This must be done before trying to wash out the stain

For sweet potato stains on hands, rub coal oil over them and they'll soon disappear.

Here is the direction for those that wish to make paper flowers. The Easter lily is composed of six petals, cut from fine grain white crepe paper, and to the back of each is glued a vein of white covered wire extending about an inch below the base of the petel. Stamens are formed of light green tissue rolled almost to a thread, and cut four and one half inches long. The pistil is made in the same manner, leaving a roll or head on the top, and should be cut five and one half inches long. Glue the edges of the petals about half way up from the base and form around the center (composed of the pistils and stamens), and close the bottom around a stem previously formed by winding satiff wire with crepe paper until the required size; then finish by winding stem neatly with green paper. Cut leaves from dark green crepe, three inches long by three fourths inches wide.

Sisters, try and make some Easter Lilies, they look just natural. I have a vase full, and my friends think they're natural, only from the first sight you know. The next time I will give some other direction, as I can make most any kind of flower. I would like to hear from some of the sisters about my own age. I wish success to Comport and all its readers, especially the shut-ins.

March is a good time for the housekeepers to begin weeding out the closets and bureau drawers, sorting over the accumulation of papers, magazines, pieces for patchwork, and old, worn-out garments; so many little things can be done before the regular routine work of housecleaning begins. As soon as the warm days come we want to be outdoors, and these stormy days are just the time for looking over chests, boxes, etc., and is it not fine to work up in the attic on a mildly warm spring day when it is raining? Anyone not blest with a good old-fashioned attic, misses one of the greatest pleasures of this life in my estimation.

Mrs. Mand Couch. Are you sure your hens were not lousy? A dust bath of wood ashes in which is spriukled powdered sulphur is fine to rid them of the pests, and a thorough drenching of the roosts and houses with kerosene oil once a week, is the only thing that will keep the mites and lice down. Do you ever wash your rose bushes in the water on washday? The very dirtiest suds is what they enjoy, then rinse thoroughly, set the pots right into the tub, and give them a good bath.

Miss Cunningham. Come on and see me and I will play and sing "Navajo" while you are piecing your "Navajo" quiit; you know the "Comport" peo rest, how thankful the dear mother must feel even though she misses the little one. She is beyond all suffering, all sorrow, and we would not call her back.

How many sermons are preached out of the pulpit? Do we not hear them every day in some way? A dear, dear, friend, one of God's noble men, came to my house recently, in his working clothes, just a plain every-day man, the conversation drifted to God and his wonderful works. This dear man said, "Some people say they have no idea what heaven is like; did you ever go out on a June morning, when the sun was shining brightly in the country, the birds singing, the roses in bloom, the green grass and flowers all about you? Well! that is a foretaste of Heaven!" That man looks on the bright side of everything, for there is a bright side though we may not always see it but it is here, and will show itself sooner or later, we must look for pleasant things and we will find them, if we look for trouble we can find it, and some people spend their entire lives looking for it, and they find an abundance. Let us all try to look on the brighter side, while going through our Gethsemane as our dear Saviour did before us; He is at the Father's right hand in heaven, after all His sufferings why should not we be? A crown of glory with many, many, bright stars is awaiting all if they only strive for it, and these sorrows, griefs, and sufferings are given us to purify us, and surely will in the end.

Mrs. Linden. Thanks very much for the music and cards, you know they were fully appreciated. Dear little Bachelor of the Queen City. Your remembrance received. April showers will be with us ere I write again. Please all of you try to do something for Christoro Brice's poor and needy, invalid mother; they live in Brutus, Michigan; clothing and bedding can be sent and gladly received by these poor worthy ones.

Any one writing for a request or favor should always enclose a stamped, directed envelope, not a stamp alone, but the envelope as well; letters written for pastime, or pleasure is simering dear ones. I prepared and sent off one hundred packages. How I needed some of my girls to assist in the good work.

Andrew Milisagle. I sent a package off for you, but it was returned. I directed it to Borland, North Carolina. There was no such town on my atlas, but thinking it might be a new place, I sent the package. If I had not put my address on, I never would have heard from it.

Dolla. Do write me again about the bonny boy, I can scarcely credit that he is yours. The needlebook is highly prized.

Lillie. I am so pleased that you are to get the book; every little helps, and this poor boy is worthy of all you can give him.

Mrs. Hardten. My love to Will, and thanks for the gitts. The painting is valued because you did the work. It is very nicely done. Let me say to all that are sending me cards, that I fully appreciate them.

Thomas Lockhart. Yours received; you write so cheerfully. God bless you.

Mrs. Orthofer, Mrs. Bacon, Phœbe Jackson. Thanks. It is so pleasant to be remembered by those we love. I wish I could write to each one that sent me gitta, but there are so many of you would wonder how one pair of hands and eyes could attend to it, aside from numerous other important duties, God bless you, dear! Write when-need it, for I have three little children. The oldest is nearly six, the youngest is two, and the one betwixt and between is four; so you see if you count all their years together, it makes a good round dozen. I sometimes have to stop and consider whether they are a dozen or not.

They are not so bad, only I am very irritable and nervous, but I shall have to try and get over it, don't you think so?

MRS. NELSON ASHDOWN, Freeport, L. I., New York.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON:

I just feel as if I can't stay away any longer. I am a lounger; have been confined to my room most of the time for three years. I try to be cheerful, but I find it very hard at times, when I am suffering, as I am today.

Do you know that if you make a salve of the white of one egg, one large spoonful of lard, powdered alum size of a hickory nut, it will cure a bad burn or scald, without leaving a scar.

What would we all do without Comfort? It is indeed a comfort to me, as I enjoy every page in it. I do a great deal of fancy work, as I situp in bed. I have just completed a silk quilt, and have a lot of scraps left that I would gladly send our dear shutins, but I can't afford stamps. Oh, the pity of it. I have no little children to inherit the dread disease that is cating my life away, and I try to be careful for my dear husband's sake not to have anything about me to spread contagion. I would say to all such sufferers to use old paper or cloths to expectorate on, and then burn them.

Well, I will come again some day, perhaps, when I will feel better.

MRS. DON ALLEN, Elwood, R. F. D., 1, Mo. DEAR SISTERS:

I have taken COMFORT a long time and think it a fine paper. I am interested in the fancy-work department also think the hints on housework and recipes excellent.

I should like to hear from readers who have cameras, also those who like to make pillows.

I will answer all who care to write, for I get very lonesome and letters are very welcome at any time. I live in the country six miles from our capital, Indianapolis, on a dairy farm.

I am twenty-three years old, and have two little girls.

I hope to hear from some of the sisters soon.

I hope to hear from some of the sisters soon.

MRS. MARIE KENNEDY, New Augusts, Ind.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I have long been a silent reader of our good paper, and at last I take Time by the topknot and write a few lines. We have had our first rain of the season this week and winter is really here; but still the ladies are wearing peek-a-boo waists with elbow sleeves, so you know it is not very cold. We are farming a ranch of eight hundred acres. I have four children and do all my own work. We are poor, but all have our health, and that is everything. We are renters, but have our own stock and implements.

Do you all have some flowers? I love them, but there are so many who do not care about them. But flowers I must have, if it is only a geranium in an old tomato can; it is food for the soul. To me all flowers are beautiful. I love nature.

I wish to hear from sisters in Florida or foreign places who could send me nice seashells. I will return all favors in some way.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON:

Dana Mrs. Wilkinson:

Comfort was one of my childhood companions, so seems like a comrade at all times. I live in the northern part of Polk County, and it is claimed to be the banner county of the state; it is the main strawberry and gardening spot, beside which we can raise oranges and other fruits.

which we can raise oranges and other fruits.

I have been married seven years and have three children. We find many useful hints in the pages of Comport and I come with a request.

I wish to start a Comport flower garden and would like a few flower seeds from every state in the Union. I am sure in this large family you have many who have more seeds than they can use. I will gladly return favors in any way I can, and thank you in advance.

thank you in advance.

DEAR EDITOR:

In butchering time I know that all the farmer sisters are anxious to know how to keep meat for next summer and save the trouble of sacking all of it. If you will follow this recipe you can let it hang in the smokehouse all summer. When you take the meat out of the barrel to smoke, wash and dry, then take powdered borax and rub all over the meat, being careful to touch all places, especially where bones are cut off, then hang up and smoke.

To Cure English Bacon

To Cure English Bacon

This process is called the "dry cure," and is considered far preferable to the New England or Yankee style of putting prepared brine or pickle over the meat. First the hog should not be too large or too fat, weighing not over two hundred pounds; then after it is dressed and cooled, cut it up into proper pieces; allow to every hundred pounds a mixture of four quarts of common salt, one quarter of a pound of saltpeter and four pounds of sugar. Rub this preparation thoroughly over and into each piece, then put them into a tight tub or suitable cask; there will be a brine form of itself, from the juices of the meat, enough at least to baste it with, which should be done two or three times a week; turning each piece every time.

In smoking this bacon, the sweetest flavor is derived from black birch chips, but if these are not to be had, the next best wood is hickory; the smoking with corncobs imparts a rank flavor to this bacon, which is very distasteful to English people visiting this country. It requires three weeks or a month to smoke this bacon properly.

Cancer Cure

Cancer Cure

For the benefit of any readers suffering from cancer I would say that Mr. Issac Mullinox, Texico, Ill., has been cured of one on his face by this simple remedy:

Take the yolk of one egg, one tablespoonful of sait, and one tablespoonful of lye soap, mix all thoroughly together and apply to the affected part twice a day.

Washington Loaf Cake

Washington Loaf Cake

Three cups of sugar, two scant cups of butter, one cup of sour milk, five eggs, one teaspoonful of soda, three tablespoonfuls of cinnamon, half a nutmeg grated, two cups of raisins, one cup of currants, and four good cups of flour. Mix as usual, and stir in fruit, dredged with flour, last. This cake will take longer to bake than plain. It is delicious, and while it takes a great deal of butter, sugar, etc., the amount of cake it makes, makes it not too expensive, and it is worth trying. The fruit may be omitted.

Chocolate Pie (Requested)

Chocolate Ple (Requested)

The way I make chocolate pie is as follows: I make a filing just the same as for cornstarch pudding, adding a small piece of butter, about two tablespoonfuls of grated chocolate, and vanilla to flavor. The whites of two eggs I reserve for frosting. I bake the lower crust first; then put in the filling; cover with the frosting (made with not too much sugar), and return to oven to brown slightly.

Mrs. Griffitts. Thanks for the card, also for your kind words regarding Thomas Lockhart; he certainly is an angel of patience.

Mrs. Orthofer, Mrs. Bacon, Phœbe Jackson.

Thanks. It is so pleasant to be remembered by those we love. I wish I could write to each one that it is an impossibility.

Mrs. Merritt. The card and doily received; thanks. If you could see the stacks of mail I have, you would wonder how one pair of hands and eyes could attend to it, aside from numerous other important duties. God bless you, dear! Write whenever you feel like it.

Herman Meuly. Thank you for your contribution to my shut-in fund.

Girls, I want to tell you all about some of the song books that the Comport people are giving away with the paper. For three yearly subscriptions they give us the choice of two song books; containing nearly all of the good oldtime songs;

Ribbon Pudding

Ribbon Pudding

Cream together one and one half cups of sugar with one half cup of butter, then beat in three eggs (whites and yolks beaten separately), add one half cup of milk and two cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder (or one teaspoonful of soda and two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar). Take one third of the mixture, add one teaspoonful of cinnamon, one half teaspoonful of cloves, one teaspoonful of cocoa, and a little nutmeg; add one half cup of chopped raisins. One half of the remaining mixture can be colored with strawberry coloring, or leave it as it is, white. Grease a deep pudding pan, put paper in the bottom, and put in the mixture a spoonful at a time, so that when it is cut the different colors will be seen in each slice; bake slowly. When done, turn onto a warm plate and serve hot with the following sauce or

Have the flour in a pan, make cavity in center. Beat the honey and yolks of eggs together. Beat the butter and sugar to acream and put into the cavity in the flour, then add the honey and yolks of eggs. Mix well with the hand, adding a little at a time, the half ounce of saleratus dissolved in a very little boiling water, until it is all in; add the ginger, and finally the whites of the eggs beaten to a stiff froth. Mix to a smooth dough. Divide the dough into seven equal parts and roll out like gingerbread. Bake in ordinary square pans, mark off the top in half inch stripes. Bake in moderate oven; dissolve sugar to glaze over top of cakes. When cool put away in stone crocks, stand the cakes up so the flat sides will not touch each other. Don't use until three months old. The cakes improve with age. I have several other honey recipes. These, of course, call for strained honey. Anyone wishing recipes for honey fruit cake, nut cake, cookies, jumbles, etc., made with honey, let me know and I will supply them through these columns.

A Corner for Boys

By Uncle John

The Kite

Fat Felix Fogg once flew a kite
And though he pulled with all his might,
It was so big and strong he rose,
Till he was standing on his toes.
Now Tommy Teaser chanced that way,
And being full of roguish play,
He grabbed poor Felix Fogg and roared,
"Let me hold, or I'll cut the cord."
"No need at all of doing harm," said Felix;
Taking Tommy's arm Taking Tommy's arm
Soon he had tied the string thereon,
Jumped backward quick and Tom was gone,
Up in the air among the stars,
To tease in Jupiter or Mars.

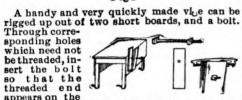

A Flyer

Cut out a piece of tin shaped like "a," and make two small holes in it at or near the center. This can be done with a steel punch or a common nail. Now, get a round stick of the same proportion but twice the size of a pencil, and drive into one end two shingle nails from which the heads have been cut. Bend the ends of the tin, and place it over the nails as shown in "b". Now, if you grasp the which need not be threaded, in-sert the bolt so that the sert the bolt so that the threaded end appears on the outside. The nut is then placed on, and by tightening with a wrench, the object you wish to work on may be held very firmly. This vice is intended to meet an emergency where no other is obtainable, and it is every bit as serviceable as the more elaborate affairs which only one out of a hundred boys could make.

Number of Stars

The stars seen upon a clear night are about 2,000 in number, allowing a like number for the half of the world not seen gives us 4,000 visible stars in all. Even the one nearest to us is at a stars in all. Even the one nearest to us is at a distance too great to be conceived by the human intellect. It has been said that a cannon ball traveling at its usual rate of speed from the creation of the world in a direct line to the North star would be still millions of miles away from it. The light of the star Sirius traveling at the rate of 192,000 miles a second takes three years to reach the earth. If the sun, which is comparatively near, were to go out it would be months before we would know it.

Picture Puzzles

The five drawings herewith represent five triber or pro-cession. Study them a little while, and you can solve them. The solutions will appear in the Boys' Corner of next month's COMFORT.

Game

A lively game for boys which is probably too noisy to be played indoors is "Keep the bag is "Keep the bag up." An inflated bladder or paper bag is tossed up in the air, and the players of which there may be any number, tap it up every time it threatens to fall. Each player must hit it in turn, and must not take more than two steps in going after it. The comical actions of those trying frantically to reach it will result in much fun and laughter, but undue roughness will spoil the whole game. If played in the house the rule should require all to stand in one position, and move only the hands in trying to reach the bag.

Work Bench

A strong work bench is needed in every boy's workshop. Use four pieces of 2 by 4 scantling 30 inches long for legs, joining them with crosspieces as shown. Next put on the six-foot long side pieces letting them extend over 6 inches, and cutting off the lower corners as the drawing illustrates. For the top use heavy planks or two thicknesses of inch boards. In the latter case the first layer may be put on crosswise if short boards are more easily pro-

Telling Number by Thought

Here's a new way of doing an old trick. Ask a person to add.1 to the triple of the number thought of, and to multiply the sum by 3; then to add to this product the number thought of, and the result will be a sum which if diminished by three and divided by 10 will be the number he thought of first. Example. Think of 6, triple it which is 18, add 1, which makes it 19. Three times this is 57, and if 6 is added it becomes 63. Now take away 3, and divide by 10, and you have your answer 6. This is simpler than it seems at first reading.

Cutting Glass

Perhaps you have a few irregular-shaped pieces of glass large enough to be of some use. You can cut them any desired size with the aid of an old file if you harden it first by heating to a bright red, and then plunging it into a chunk a bright red, and then plunging it into a chunk of beeswax several times. After making the mark with the sharp point strike the glass directly under it, and it will break evenly. If there is a large margin to be cut off you can manage it better by laying the glass flat upon the ruler, the marked part facing up, and being raised from the floor a quarter of an inch. When you have it thus arranged bear sharply down on the extreme edges. on the extreme edges.

It was at this interesting point that Mehitable

It was at this interesting point that Mehitable was compelled, by the sudden discovery on the part of Jerry related in the previous chapter, to abandon her post. She would have given a good deal to hear what followed, and never quite forgave the boy for disturbing her. The indifference with which Mabel spoke, however, relieved her from any fears of rivalry in the design which she had already formed upon the lawyer's hand.

Mr. Parkhurst, for obvious reasons, was not pleased with his daughter's manner of treating the subject. It promised ill for the sacrifice that he wished to propose to her.

"Mabel," said he with some severity of manner, "I shall be obliged to you to speak with less levity. To bring Mehitable into the conversation is entirely uncalled for, and the suggestion of a matrimonial connection between Mr. Clarke and a person occupying a menial position so far beneath his station in society is in the highest degree improper, and might justly be regarded as an insult by him, did he happen to be present to hear it."

"Father," said Mabel penitently, "you must pardon me for having spoken as you would not have me. I certainly have, if I have incurred your displeasure."

"Mabel, my daughter," said the father affectionately, "you have ever been a good and dutiful daughter hitherto. I may by and by make still another demand upon your duty. But I am speaking of my visitor of yesterday. Do you remember hearing of him when we lived in the city?"

"No, sir; although his face looked slightly familier."

"No, sir; although his face looked slightly familiar."

"He had seen you, however. But that is not to the purpose at present. Can you guess what was his errand?"

"No, sir. I suppose it could hardly be of a professional nature, as, since your—" Mabel hesitated to say failure, knowing her father's sensitiveness upon this point.
"Since the great misfortune, you mean, which drove me out into this wilderness to lead a miserable evistence, downward of all the which drove me out into this wilderness to lead a miserable existence, deprived of all the sources of my former happiness."

"Do you, indeed, take it so much to heart?" said the daughter, taking her father's hand and looking in his face with sympathy. "I wish you could feel as I do. It seems to me as if I never lived till now. I delight in the wild freedom of the woods and the unshackled life which I lead here. In the city one is so hemmed in by conventionalties that it is impossible to feel yourself quite independent. Father, I could live here always without one longing for the old life that I led in the city."

"I don't pretend," said Mr. Parkhurst peevishly, "to enter into your youthful enthusiasm, and I marvel much that a daughter of mine, the descendant of a lofty family with whom nobles have not infrequently intermarried, should be willing to confess such plebelan tastes. I cannot conceive what pleasure you can find in living in a miserable hut"—Mabel was about to utter an exclamation, but prudently refrained—"a miserable but built of long in the mider."

living in a miserable hut"—Mabel was about to utter an exclamation, but prudently refrained —"a miserable hut built of logs, in the midst of a rude, uncultivated race of people who care nothing for good blood, and fancy their plebeian stock as good as ours. I say I cannot conceal my astonishment that one so carefully reared should imbibe and give expression to such tastes. For my own part it has proved to me more unendurable than I anticipated. I remember once to have read an interesting account of a shipwrecked sailor named, I think, 'Robinson Crusoe,' who was forced to live by himself on an uninhabited island. The book was written by one Defoe, and was sent to me in a package forwarded from London. I little thought when I read it that I was doomed in my own person to pass through a trial equally hard, and to bear a solitude almost as intolerable."

"But, father, we have good neighbors, while Robinson Crusoe, if I remember rightly, was not so fortunate. You surely can not compare your situation with his."
"Neighbors, Mabel? And what kind of neighbors? Do you think I can be on terms of intimacy with the rude, uncultivated settlers?"
"Surely you do not regard the Davenports in that light?"
"Not they are exceptions. I admit. But it that light?"

"No, they are exceptions, I admit. But it would take many such to supply to me the place of all that I enjoyed in the city."

Mabel felt that nothing she could say was likely to divert her father from the melancholy view that he now saw fit to express. She accordingly, after a minute's pause, endeavored to change the current of conversation by suggesting a question.

gesting a question.

"You were about to tell me on what business Mr. Clarke came, were you not, father?" "Yes, Mabel," said her father, brightening up. "What will you say when I tell you that he has come to offer us the chance of resuming our old station in society; that he has it in his power to restore us a measure of wealth equal to that which I inherited and lost?"

to that which I inherited and lost?"
"Father, you have excited my curiosity deeply. Has this indeed been as you say?"
"I do not wonder at your astonishment, Mabel. I was myself taken by surprise. But I can explain all in a very few words."
Mr. Parkhurst here entered into an explanation of facts already familiar to my reader, and

ORNISH Pianos Organs

Why Shouldn't You Buy a First-Class Instrument as Low as any Dealer?

The dealer, even though he buys only one at a time, gets it at wholesale price.

when YOU buy one why don't YOU get it at wholesale price?

THE MANUFACTURER who sells through agents and dealers dare not quote you the wholesale price, for he would antagonize the dealers.

THE DEALER cannot sell to you at whole-sale price, for that would leave him no profit. We get along without the dealer and can therefore quote you the wholesale factory prices direct.

We have thousands more satisfied patrons all over the land, who recommend our instruments and defend our business methods, than there are dealers.

And besides, our instruments sell themselves, by the better value they prove over all others—they are better moneys worth than you can get from any dealer or from any other manufacturer.

The Corona

manufacturer.

We ask you to prove it for yourself—by your own examination, trial and comparison. That's the way a quarter of a million customers have proved it for three generations.

First we ask you to send us your name and address.

We will then send you our catalogue, which is a marvel of printing, color and design, showing the choicest of our fifty styles in miniature. The book will enable you to make a selection just as intelligently as if you saw the instrument at factory. We will also send you a reference book of 5.000 recent purchasers (some of whom you may know) and a list of testimonials from old Cornish patrons.

And further, we will send you a copy of our bond of indemnity, which is an iron-clad guarantee that no responsibility whatever will attach to you in placing one of our instruments in you home for examination and free trial. We take all the risk. We put you under no obligation whatever.

Our bond of indemnity also insures the instrument for a term of twenty-five years against defect in material or workmanship.

We deliver free of all freight charges, if desired. You place the instrument in your home and use it one month just as if it were your own. You call in your mustcal friends and let them put it to a test and pass judgment upon it before you decide to buy it—we agree to find no fault with your decision.

which, therefore, do not require to be repeated. It is hardly necessary to say that Mabel listened with eager interest. The revelation gave her pleasure, but not for herself. The discontent her father had expressed with the mode of life to which he was at present reduced led her, as a matter of course, to rejoice that means were provided for his restoration to the scenes which could alone content him. For her own part she matter of course, to rejoice that means were provided for his restoration to the scenes which could alone content him. For her own part she had no desire to go back to the city, and would have considered such a removal a great sacrifice. But her union with Henry Davenport would render this unnecessary, and although it would pain her to be entirely separated from her father, she had no doubt that an arrangement could be made by which she could pass a part of the year in the city. For the rest, her father would be contented in that sphere which he was prepared to value the more because of his temporary withdrawal from it.

It was, therefore, with a glow of pleasure that she said, "Father, I am indeed heartily glad for your sake that your losses are likely to be so amply made up to you, and I hereby acknowledge my penitence for having spoken somewhat disrespectfully of the lawyer who is the bearer of this welcome intelligence. I shall henceforth adopt the opinion that bad looks are no indication of a bad disposition. But, father, you will remember that I, too, have appetitive to communicate."

"Yes, Mabel, I do remember that you solicited the interview. Pray speak without hesitation, and if it is any favor which is in my power to grant, count it already granted."

"It is indeed a matter that vitally concerns my happiness, father," said Mabel in a low voice.

"Is it indeed so important?" asked Mr. Park-hurst, who as yet did not suspect the nature of the request which his daughter was about to make. "Indeed, I cannot conjecture what it is. Tell me without reserve."

Mabel rose from her chair, and sank at her father's feet in a childlike attitude.

"Father," she murmured, "I am very happy. Henry Davenport has told me that he loved

"Good Heavens!" exclaimed Mr. Parkhurst in undisguised dismay. "Can this be true? And do you love him, Mabel?"

Startled by her father's manner, Mabel answered: "I love him as my life, father."
Rising hastily to his feet, Joseph Parkhurst paced the room with knitted brow and disordered steps. Mabel watched him with equal ordered steps. Mabel watched him with e surprise and anxiety. "Father," she at length said, timidly,

"But, father, it beedn't separate us," said Mabel eagerly, supposing that her father's objection was founded upon this. "Henry could arrange to live in the city a part of the time." "Child, you do not understand the matter. Your marriage with this young man would keep me a lifelong prisoner in this odious wilderness."

"But why should it? Could you not support an establishment in the city, and now and then come out to visit your children. The property which you are about to recover——"
"That property I shall never recover if you marry Henry Davenport," said her father gloomily.

"But what possible connection can there be between the two things?" questioned Mabel in perplexity. "Why should my marriage stand in the way of your recovering what is rightfully yours?"
"Sit down, Mabel—let us both sit—while I tell you. It is a circumstance which I regret nearly as much as you can. I have no personal objection to young Davenport. I would receive him gladly as a son-in-law, but there is one thing I have got to tell you. This lawyer demands a reward for his discovery of the letter which makes known to me the whereabouts of the treasure. That reward he has himself indicated. He has asked you as his wife."
"But what can he know of me?" asked Mabel in amazement.

"But what can he know of the asked shades in amazement.

Mr. Parkhurst shook his head.
"I am afraid, Mabel, that whatever else he is, he is an obstinate man. So far as I can judge, his mind seems to be set upon marrying you, and he will not accept anything else."

"But, father, he is probably fond of money. Offer him a large amount of money for his services whatever he asks. Give him whatever.

Mabel spoke with earnestness, her cheeks glowing with the excitement of her feelings, and her face lifted imploringly to her father's, which gathered gloom as the proceeded.

"Perhaps you did not offer him enough."

"He distinctly told me that no offer, however large, would induce him to forego his self-named reward. Be assured, Mabel, that I desisted from no representations which would be likely to influence him. As he himself said, he might easily have concealed the matter from me and appropriated the whole empone from me, and appropriated the whole amount to his own purposes without fear of detection, since I should be wholly ignorant of the matter."

"And why did he not? I wish that he had."
"You seem to forget, Mabel," said her father reproachfully, "that my happiness as well as yours is involved in this matter."
"Forgive me than we feel."

"Forgive me then, my father; we are both unfortunate, we are both unhappy."

You who wrote him one letter, do you not wish—now his frail body is laid away in the earth, that you had written him oftener than you did? You who sent him old newspapers, earth, that you had written him oftener than you did? You who sent him old newspapers, and made him pay the extra postage, would you not give all you possess to undo that thoughtless deed? It is too late now, too late, he does not need your aid now. Many would if they could, bend over his little casket, and look at the still white face, smother it with flowers, who yet in life would not send him a postage stamp—happy Herbert, you don't have to depend on the whims of a fickle world for your sunshine and cheer now. God is attending to that. Ah, cousins, won't you, as you bend o'er the silent form of this your departed cousin, doubly resolve to bend all your energies to alleviating the sufferings of those who remain? Soon many more of the great army of suffering will have passed over the silent stream. Ere they go, won't you do for them, what you might have done for Herbert Hipple? Promise me you will, and if you will, he has not died in vain. I commend Herbert's brother Walter to your care;—what you neglected to do for Herbert, do for him, and God will bless you in the doing. Anthony Good, the noble boy who is Vice President of Pa., is the Mr. Good men-tioned in this letter. The money other boys spend in whiskey and cigarettes, Anthony de-votes to works of mercy. There are about half a dozen such noble boys in the League, half a dozen among 20,000. Think of that!

Comfort's League of Cousins

Comfort's League of Cousins

For the information of those who have not been regular readers of Comfort, and others who are becoming interested in the Cousins' League for the first time, and are ignorant of its aim and objects, the following facts will be of interest:

The League of Cousins was founded as a means of bringing the scattered members of Comport's immense circle of readers into one big, happy family. Its aim is to promote a feeling of kinship and relationship among all readers. It was primarily started as a society for the juvenile members of Comport's family, only, but those of more mature years clamored for admittance so persistently that it was deemed advisable to impose no age limit; thus all are eligible to admittance into our League provided they conform to its rules and are animated by the child spirit.

Though the older folks are admitted, the young folks will always be the first consideration, and Uncle Charlie will write his page with a view of entertaining our young people solely.

Those who wish to join our League can do so by subscribing to Comport for one year or inducing some one else to subscribe, and sending us their subscription. No premiums will be given those sending in members for the League.

If you are already a subscriber you can join by renewing your subscription, or subscribing a year ahead. You can have the membership card and button sent to yourself and the Comport to a friend, if you already take the paper. All who join the League will receive a button and a handsome certificate of membership, also Comport for one year, and the privilege of having their names in the letter list.

How to become a Member

How to become a Member

How to become a Member

In order to become a full-fledged League member and procure a card and button, you must become a paid-in-advance Comport subscriber by sending fifteen cents to the subscription department, for yourself, or renew your own subscriptions now. When you do this, send five cents extra, or twenty cents in all, and say that you wish to join Comports. The five cents additional pays your membership fee and for the League button and membership card engrossed with your own name and membership number. All previous League membership offers are hereby withdrawn and only those who strictly comply with our above offer will be admitted to membership. It costs but twenty cents to join the League, a League which promises to be the greatest society of young people on earth, Never in the world's history was so much given for so little. Never could twenty cents be invested to such advantage, and bring such splendid returns. Don't hesitate, join us at once and induce your friends to do likewise.

All those League members, who desire a list of the cousins residing in their several states, can secure the same by sending a stamped addressed envelope and five cents in stamps to Nellie Rutherford, 1442 Pacific St., Brooklyn, N. Y., our grand secretary. Some of the lists contain hundreds of names, so our secretary must have some trifling remuneration as she is devoting the whole of her time to this work.

Here's a big shut-in list. I want you to write a letter to each one of those below, and put something in your letter besides music. Invalids can't eat talk, the most of you would like to feed them on that kind of diet, but you'll take mighty good care to fill your own stomachs with something more substantial. When invalids ask for reading, please send them story books, or books worth while. Old magazines, and old newspapers are not wanted, and will be refused. I've instructed all the shut-ins not to send stamps for packages that are held because of insufficient postage at the office where they were mailed by thoughtless Goops, who think a one-cent stamp will carry a ton of old rubbish. These packages are never worth sending for, so don't be fooled by them. Another thing, never return books sent you to read. Tom Lockhart informs me that numberless books, great heavy tomes that he couldn't to the state of the first state of the firs less books, great heavy tomes that he couldn't handle, were sent him to read, with the request that he return them when read, and pay post-age. It costs twenty-four cents to mail a three-pound book, so shut-ins stick to the books sent you, don't return them. Stick to everything that comes your way, God knows it is mighty little. Remember also that to one kind heart and one generous giver in this world, there are twenty hearts of stone, and fifty empty heads, and don't let the stony-hearted and thoughtless rob you of the little money God's good angels send you. Lawrence Bird, writing me on December 21st informs me he had received December 21st informs me he had received $18.65. God bless those who sent it! Lawrence was very sick at the time he wrote. I'll let you know exactly what he got, as I believe it encourages you in this beautiful work of caring for God's sick and poor, to know results. Don't send money to me to forward. I have to write letters and pay postage, and I'm worked to death, and have not all the strength in the world. Now get busy. Some day, the only thing that may plead for you at the Bar of Heaven will be the fact that you once wrote a letter and sent a dime to one of our shut-ins. That one deed of love may win you paradise.

they might have been, she contrived to maintain a certain standing in society. In secret she half starved herself and Victoria that a brave front might be presented to the world. As the girl grew in grace and beauty, the mother counted on her making a brilliant match, and to this end the sacrifices she made to give her the necessary accomplishments to fit her for society were no light ones.

Gene might have been saved a world of misery if his companion's thoughts could have been communicated to him telepathically, but as it was he sat there entranced by her physical loveliness and never dreamed of all the future held in store for him.

When they arrived at the residential portion of the city Victoria drew rein at the curbstone, exclaiming:

"I don't fancy running the gauntlet of staring eyes any further so I think I will walk the rest of the way!"

"If you will wait a moment," said Gene as he helped her to dismount, "I will walk the distance with you. Here, sonny," to a grinning urchin, "don't you want to ride this horse over to Watson's livery stable?"

Gene tossed him a coin, and with a whoop of delight the boy tore away down the street.

"I am afraid," "Gene said as he turned to Victoria, "the ride has tired you. It must have been difficult to ride that saddle."

Victoria broke into a ringing laugh.

"Do you know," she said, "it never occurred to either of us that the saddles might have been changed."

The compliment was florid but it pleased her, and she acknowledged it by a sweet, slow,

"Who was that?" asked Victoria, as the automobile disappeared up the driveway.

"That is Mrs. Corcoran, wife of the president of the Harvester Trust. They have only lately returned. That great house is kept shut up for a good part of the year, for the wife is a confirmed invalid. I imagine her wealth does not bring her much enjoyment, poor lady," Gene finished commiseragtinly.

"No, I should think it would not, and yet," with a longing look at the place seen dimly.

"I should imagine," she stole a swift glance at him, "he would be a powerful enemy."

"Yes," with conviction, "he would."

"And if his sympathies were once enlisted," with another glance at him, "an equally powerful friend."

"Oh, yes." At that moment he was glad, very glad that he hadn't sent regrets.
Gene stood where she left him and he was, it must be confessed, picking a long red hair from the sleeve of his coat as he looked up and aw Judge Blodgett's merry eyes fixed upon

The judge had seen the two walking up the street together, and he now put his own construction—(not the right one as the reader knows)—on the significance of Gene's act.

"There is something funny about red hair," he said, his laughter wrinkles strongly in evidence, "or rather the possessor of it. He or she, as the case may be, is always either loved or hated. There is no half way business about it. But say, Gene, if you're going off on any more such excursions you really ought to carry a clothes brush! Those red ones are such a dead give away, you know!"

There was that ominous tightening about the lips which betokens the fact that the masculine temper is nettled, as Gene rejoined stiffly:

"Judge, I really can't say I relish your joking on any such subject, and I wish you a good afternoon."

The judge doubled up in the effort to restrain

Mrs. Moore.

"Whew!" he spluttered at last. "He is hard hit for a fact."

At his boarding house Warfield found awaiting him a special delivery letter, containing important information in connection with the Harvester Trust case, and this detained him so long that he was almost the last arrival at the Huston reception.

Coming from the cool dusk of the street into the glare of lights, confused mingling of black coats, pretty frocks and white shoulders, Gene felt a bit dazed until he caught sight of Victoria standing in the receiving line with Mrs. toria standing in the receiving line with Mrs. Huston and a tall lady with a sadly lined and timeworn face, who was introduced to him as

Mrs. Moore.
Victoria smiled up at him, and presently he found himself walking beside her through the crowded rooms. In her trim-fitting riding habit of the afternoon he had considered her lovely, but now clothed in some pale green fabric thatshimmered as she walked, and foamy lace about the snowy expanse of shoulders, he thought her dazzlingly fair.
"What a companion," Gene thought, "to share a man's triumph." He did not ask himself how she would have shared his defeat.
"Do you know, Mr. Warfield," she said as she led him into the deserted east room—it was scarcely large enough to be called a conservatory—where the flowers were kept, "I was beginning to think I was not to have the pleasure of seeing you at all."
"I should have been here earlier, but I was detained by a business matter."

"I should have been here earlier, but I was detained by a business matter."
"It is always business with you lawyers," she said roguishly, "and it may be just possible I shall need your professional services in pleading my case with my uncle. He gave me that horse, and he has taken it upon himself to be very angry at me for what happened this afternoon. I wasn't to blame for the accident, was 1?"
"Certainly not."

"Certainly not."
"And for what came after?"
Of this he was not so sure, but he answered

"I think I will shoulder the responsibility for

"Maybe I will," with a sigh of mock. relief, "but then I don't know whether I shall be any better off after all. Perhaps I may only escape Scylla to be wrecked on Charybdis. You lawyers do charge such abominable fees!"

Gane smiled as he glanced down at the little yers do charge such abominable fees!"

Gene smiled as he glanced down at the little hand resting so lightly on his arm. There is sometimes a wonderful power in suggestion.
"I promise not to charge more than you can pay," he said with his lips close to her shell-like ear, "though I am afraid the fee may be a large one."

The words were spoken jestingly, yet there was an undercurrent of real feeling in them, and as she caught their full significance, a little sensation of scorn took possession of her.

"I didn't come here to listen to pretty speeches from you, Mr. Warfield, but to show you the wonderful new orchid my uncle has been buying lately. Uncle Jim's passion for collecting orchids is only limited by his pocketbook. Are you interested in orchids?"

"I am afraid I know very little about them," Gene confessed, then added, "that is, I only know the wildings of my New Hampshire woods."

"The wildings of your New Hampshire woods?" she echoed. "Do tell me about them, please. I have always wanted to get back to Nature and study her at first hand, but have always been too busy with society and one thing and another to gratify my desire. I can't let slip the opportunity of learning something from one who, I feel sure, has been a deep student of Nature. Please tell me about the flowers of your New Hampshire woods."

Thus adjured and flattered by her apparent interest, Warfield plunged into a long disquisition on the beauties of New England forests in general and New Hampshire woods in particular, and from this topic by almost insensible degrees he was led to speak of his boyhood home. Of his sweetheart Theta he said never a word, that was a name he could not discuss with any woman, but he told his listener about his mother, and of the goodness and almost saintliness of her life. At this Victoria grew bored and had to restrain a strong inclination to yawn behind her fan, but she kept the look of interest in her eyes and let him talk on, for being a woman she knew nothing flatters a man quite so much as being allowed to do all the talking he pleases. And Gene told her something, too, of his early struggle to acquire an education, and of his later dreams of power and conquest. At this Victoria woke out of her abstraction, for he later dreams of power and conquest. At this Victoria woke out of her abstraction, for he had touched the responsive chord in her own makeup, and when he concluded she said de-life worth the living, it is the one thing that has lifted man above the level of the brute. I has lifted man above the level of the brute. I adore ambitious people, the people who accomplish things. I, myself, have always been covetous of power. I want to feel that I can sit as an equal with the highest of the land, and that none can say me nay. You agree with me, Mr. Warfield, do you not? You do not think the less of me for saying this?"

Her red lips were softly parted; her eyes were brilliant as she finished the thoughts that chimed in so well with his own, and as he chimed in so well with his own, and as he looked at her Gene caught his breath with a little gasp.

"Like you the less," he murmured softly, "how could 1? Be merciful in your power and don't look at me like that—I am only human—as for power—you couldn't have more than you have now."

"You have beguiled me with your flattering speeches, Mr. Warfield. Do you hear those carriages? The people are going away. We have been talking here a long time. I fear tongues will be wagging about us tomorrow." "Let them wag," said Gene, as he bent nearer to her.

"Let them wag," said Gene, as he bent nearer to her.

She laughed again and threw back her head, and he saw the curves of a perfect chin and neck. In that moment she looked like Circe weaving her spells. Her spell was upon him, and no worshiper of the sun-goddess was ever more besotted than he as he bent over her and suddenly, before she was aware of what he intended, he caught her to him with sudden passion and pressed his lips full upon her white throat. Then he went swiftly out of the room.

Victoria looked after him with a gleam of scornful triumph in her bright eyes.

"And I have heard that man called a great lawyer," she said aloud.

the first few days depends the bird's future life.

A few years ago I thought, with other poultry people, that chicks must have a mash, or Johnny cake; but now I know how much better and healthier they are on dry grain; and the difference in labor is wonderful. Mashes had to be scalded and thoroughly steamed, or they were not digestible. Then they could not be fed whilst hot, nor quite cold. The time women have lost each year waiting for kettles to boil, and dough to cool! Just in the spring, too, when women need every moment for house-cleaning, and fixing up summer clothes. Then to think that all the sacrifice of time and patience was just so much waste.

Of course I still believe in two mash feeds a day, after the first week, because they allow the mixing of several wholesome things which it would be difficult to get the chicks to eat if fed them-alone; but dry grain is the thing for fed them alone; but dry grain is the thing for the "little and often" lunches that the babies need every two hours or so.

need every two hours or so.

I have given instructions before about a brooder for incubator chicks, but will repeat a few of the main points for the benefit of the forgetful ones, or those who have incubators for the first time.

Give the incubator a good coat of whitewash inside, before using it. Cover the drum which furnishes the heat under the hover with two or three thicknesses of flannel, to make it soft and mothery for the little bodies wash inside, before using it. Cover the drum which furnishes the heat under the hover with two or three thicknesses of flannel, to make it soft and mothery for the little bodies to cuddle up against. Cover the floor of the hover compartment with a piece of old carpet or felt, and the outside compartment with sweepings from hay-mow. Have the heat running steadily at 95 degrees for several hours before the chicks are to be put into it, and keep it at that heat the first seven or eight days. Then gradually let it fall to 75 degrees. Of course, I mean the heat under the hover. The rest of the brooder will be, and should be, several degrees lower.

Keep fresh water in vessels the chicks can get only their bills into, in the outer compartment. Never neglect seeing that the babies are safely cuddled up to the heat at dusk, especially if there is frost during the week. There is always danger of an nervous little one straying into a cold corner, where it will get chilled into an attack of bowel trouble, if not killed outright.

During the bright, sunny hours in the middle of the day, don't be afraid to let the chicks have plenty of fresh air in the playroom; and at feeding-time, when they are all busy, give the hover compartment a thorough airing.

When Biddy is doing the brooding, remember she is pretty sure to need dusting with some good insect powder. The nest-box she sat in should have been cleaned, and a handful of camphor balls scattered under the hay of the nest. Moreover, all hens should be dusted before setting, twice during the 21 days, three days after the hatch is out, and each week so long as she broods the chicks. Half the ills of baby birds spring from vermin. The custom of greasing little chicks is dangerous, for it opens the pores of the skin and makes them susceptible to cold. These remarks all apply to ducks, turkeys, and game birds, as well as to chickens.

Fresh air, warmth, and good food prevent dozens of troubles almost impossible to cure, once contracted; so look to the little things well, for th well. for they are what counts.

well, for they are what counts.

By now, everyone who reads this column ought to know that thirty hours must be allowed for the proper digestion and assimilation of the yolk, which is absorbed into the abdomen immediately before the chick breaks through the shell. Incubator chicks are best left in the machine for twelve or fifteen hours. When Biddy has done the hatching, do not move her to the brood coop for twenty-four hours, unless she is a flighty person, who keeps move her to the brood coop for twenty-four hours, unless she is a flighty person, who keeps getting off the nest, in which case it is better to keep the chicks in a covered box by the kitchen stove until some more motherly hen can be persuaded to adopt them (always try to set two or three hens at the same time). Good hens, that have not been bothered with ver-set two of three heas at the same time). Good hens, that have not been bothered with vermin, seldom give any trouble about the last twenty-four hours, if well fed.

Now, about the all-important question of feeding: For the first two or three days get ten pounds of rape and millet seed, pinhead oatmeal and cracked corn, charcoal, and fine, sharp grit. Mix all together. If you cannot get pinhead oatmeal, buy hulled oats and break them up fine. The grain must also be cracked quite fine; in fact, it is safer to put the mixture through a sieve which will allow nothing larger than millet to go through. Then there is no danger of chicks being choked. Feed the mixture by scattering amongst the sweepings, which will encourage the babies to scratch and take plenty of exercise.

Morning and evening make a mash by chopping a hard-boiled egg, shell and all, green

Morning and evening make a mash by chopping a hard-boiled egg, shell and all, green onion tops or sprouts. Mix with stale bread crumbs, and feed on a flat pie plate or strip of wood. After the chicks are two weeks old, the cast and corn need not be quite so fine—more the size of hemp seed, which can be added to the mixture; so can cracked wheat or barley, and the mash can be made of ground corn and oats. with onions and scalded liver and oats, with onions and scalded liver, chopped, thrice a week—about a small cupful

I think it is too strong What I mean by scalded liver is liver dropped into a kettle of boiling water, and left to boil up once. Leave to cool in water. Then the liver will not be robbed of all the blood and strength. Quite raw, I think it is too strong for little chicks. When I can't get liver, or for a change, I mix the grain with scalding milk, two or three times a week. Never make more at a time than will be fed within the next few hours, as it is likely to sour.

Pot-cheese is a favorite dish with all poultry, and very wholesome. If there is any tendency to bowel trouble, make rice water by boiling a cup of rice in two quarts of water, for half an hour, and when cold, use in place of the drinking water.

Keep brooders and brood coops clean and dry.

Keep brooders and brood coops clean and dry. The grass round coops should be kept cut close, so that the chicks can run about easily. See that every coop is closed at night, and do not let the chicks out until the dew is off the grass in the morning. Above all, don't give hens too many chicks to brood whilst the weather is cold, for most usually some will have to be so far away from the heat of her body that they will get chilled contract howel trouble and will get chilled, contract bowel trouble, and die. Every chick a hen's wings can stretch over, is not the well-brooded chick. Cold nights, all want a place next to her breast.

A. B. H., tells of working through an outbreak of roup amongst her fowls; then asks the following questions: I have been using the permanganate of potassium in the drinking water of the flock. Will it do good as a preventive, or will it hurt the fowls? I am going to get some thoroughbred fowls and turkeys. What shall I do to prevent their catching the roup?

A.—The permanganate will not hurt the birds, but a teaspoonful of kerosene to every quart of water will be better as a preventive. You can do nothing more than disinfect the houses and yards, but it seems unfortunate that you have to risk bringing thoroughbred birds onto the premises while the mongrels are affected with such a contagious disease. Nothing is better than permanganate of potassium for swabbing out the throats of the birds which, you say, still show some trace of canker. Yes, the frost will do much to purify the yards, but it will be safer to keep the birds shut up for two or three days, scatter lime about freely, leave for twelve hours, and then plough under.

D. L. A., has sixty hens and seven roosters—Plymouth Rocks. Hens laying well through the winter, not over fifty per cent. of the eggs hatched. On breaking a fresh egg, finds a black spot near the germ. Asks what is the cause of the spot, and if I think it is the cause of the egg's not hatching?

A.—I should imagine that you feed your hens with heavy, stimulating food, and that they are too fat, which frequently causes a small clot of blood in the egg. Another cause may be neglect to gather eggs regularly twice a day in cold weather. If you have only a few nests, one hen after another goes on to the same nest to lay, and the constant heat starts incubation. Then, when the nest is left after laying hours are over, the egg chills and causes the germ to die. Dou't use any egg-producing powders or foods. Feel the hens to see if they are fat. If so, cut down grain; feed clover mash, wheat, cut bone, hulled oats, and give them free range if possible. Gather eggs twice or three times a day, if the weather is very cold.

J. W. S.—I thank you for your letter.

J. W. S .- I thank you for your letter.

G. P. S.—What is the best month to fill the incubator for early chicks?

A.—If you have a poultry-house, and want to raise chicks to meet the early poultry market, January. But for early summer chickens, March will be quite soon enough.

But for early summer chickens, March will be quite soon enough.

J. C. —How long are hens' eggs good for hatching? (2) Is it all right to mate the father bird with his pullets? If not, why? (3) Do you think it best to have a floor in the poultry-house.

A.—I like to see eggs as fresh as possible for hatching, but they can be kept several weeks if turned every day, and kept in a steady temperature, above freezing, but not over 65 degrees. (2) If the rooster and hens were from distinctly different families, it would not hurt to mate the father to his own pullets; but in-breeding is a dangerous proposition, and should never go beyond one generation. Unless he is a specially wellmarked or shaped bird, whose good points you are specially anxious to perpetuate, it would be better to get a strange bird. (3) Unless the ground is damp, I think dirt floors are to be preferred in poultry-houses. After the house is built, fill in a foot above the level of the outside surface. A house twelve or fifteen feet wide, seven feet high in front, sloping to five feet in back, with 3 by 21-2 windows, every six foot. This house can be any length, divided inside by wire partitioning, every twelve feet. Run a platform, 21-2 feet wide, and one foot from the ground, along the back as a dropping-board, and have two parallel roosts above the board. Provide five nests for every fifteen birds. Cover the entire house, sides, front, back and roof, with goodquality roofing paper. Such a house is not at all fancy, but it is tidy looking and substantial.

Note. I have just been notified by the agents of the company who manufactured the little clover cutter, that the old stock is sold out, and the firm, having gone into the automobile business, will not manufacture any more. I suppose that they were really too cheap, for I have noticed that they never tried to push them as they do their other implements.

The manuscript was a mental tapestry, into which she had woven exquisite shades of thought, and curious and quaint devices and rich, glowing imagery that flecked the groundwork with purple and amber and gold. But would the design be duly understood and appreciated by the great, busy, bustling world, for whose amusement and improvement she had labored so assiduously at the spinning-wheels of fancy—the loom of thought? Would her fellow-creatures accept it in the earnest, loving spirit in which it had been manufactured? Would they hang this Gobelin of her brain along the walls of memory, and turn to it tenderly, reading reverently its ciphers and its illuminations; or would it be rent and ridiculed, and trampled under foot? This book was a shrine to which her purest thoughts, her holiest aspirations traveled like pilgrims, offering the best of which her nature was capable. Would those for whom she had patiently chiselled and built it guard and prize and keep it; or smite and overturn and defile it? Looking down at the mass of MS. now ready for the printer, a sad, tender, yearning expression filled the author's eyes; and her little white hands passed caressingly over its closely-written pages, as a mother's soft fingers might lovingly stroke the face of a child about to be thrust out into a hurrying crowd of cold, indifferent strangers, who perhaps would rudely jeer at and browbeat her darling.

CHAPTER XXX.

COMMITTED THEM TO HIM WHO CALMED THE GALILEAN GALE.

It was one of those rare and royal afternoons late in August, when summer, conscious that her reign is well-nigh ended, gathers all her gorgeous drapery, and proudly robes the world in regal pomp and short-lived splendor. Pearly cloud islets, with silver strands, clustered in the calm blue of the upper air. Restless gulls flashed their spotless wings, as they circled and dipped in the shining waves. A strong, steady, southern breeze curled and crested the beautiful, bounding billows, over which a fishing-smack danced like a gilded bubble; and as the aged willows bowed their heads, it whispered messages from citron, palm, and orange graves, gleaming far, far away under the white fire of the Southern Crown.

Strange tidings these "winged winds" waft over sea and land; and today, listening to low tones that traveled to her from Le Bocage, Edna looked out over the everchanging, wrinkled face of the ocean, and fell into a reverie.

Silence reigned in the sitting-room; Hattle fitted a new tarlatan dress on her doll, and Felix was dreaming of Prestompans. It was one of those rare and royal after-have a pair of wire cutters to use for cuttring and so save the fingers.

To make this Toque frame, first measure the wire which runs from center of back to center of front; this is nine inches; the other two front pieces are the same length. Out these three wires, then, each nine inches long. Three inches from one end of the center wire fasten the other two, so that one end of each wire will be three inches long (the same as the center wire), and the other end six inches long. The side wires are all in one piece, which is twelve inches long. Twist the middle of this wire around the other three at center, letting the ends go out on either side. Four inches from center bend the front (and next two wires) deeply; four and a half inches from center bend the two side wires in same manner. Now make a circle of wire seventeen inches in circumference; cut it nineteen inches long and lap it two inches, winding closely with the wire. This circle is the wire that fits the head. Lay this circle into the bends you have made in your long wires, and fasten securely with the wire, so that the long wires are fastened to the head circle at regular intervals. Of course the short ends of the three front wires just meet the head circle, and bend around it. (This is the back of Toque.) Now you should have something that looks like illustration Fig. 3.

Now take a piece of wire eight inches long; fasten ends together and lay this circle on top of crown, two inches be lo w where all the wires were first fastened, at center of crown. Fasten this oircle to each rib BACK of Toque. Fig. 3.

be low where all the wires were first fastened, at center of crown. Fasten this oircle to each rib beack; fasten de circle one inch at right of center of back; fasten the other end one inch at left of center of back; fasten the other end one inch at left of center of back; let it lay around the crown about two inches below the circle already fastened on. Fasten to each rib with the wire. This completes the crown. Cut a piece of wire about seventeen inches long and fasten one end to head wire about two and one half inches at right of center of back; fasten the other end two and one half inches at left of center of back. Fasten this circle with tie wire to each rib of brim, midway between head wire and ends of brim wire. Out a piece of wire about twenty-four inches long; fasten one end to head wire two and one half inches at right of center of back (at same place where last circle was fastened), and the other end at same distance to the left of center of back, and let this circle run out to the end of each of the ribs. Fasten securely by bending end of rib wires over circular wire and fasten with tie wire and a short plume. This is a good shape for women of any age from fitteen to seventy, as the trimming may be varied infinitely. It may be covered with any material, light or heavy, delicate or dark; with straw and trimmed with plumes; with foliage and flowers for a flower hat. The shape may be varied in numberless ways, by the position and angle of the bandeau. It may rest flat on the head; it may be raised high in front; it may be raised at one side, in fact anything can be done with this shape except to raise it at the back, which of course is out of the question, "Father!" remonstrated Mabel, in pained surprise, "surely you would not recommend me to marry this man."

"I have seen more of the world than you have, Mabel," said her father, half conscious and half ashamed of the selfish motives which prompted him to speak thus. "I have seen more of life, and more of the world than you have, and I know that such marriages as this are often productive of happiness. Would it not be better to become the wife of a successful city lawyer than to spend all your life in the wilderness?"

"Father," said Mabel slowly, "you forget that I love Henry Davenport, and as for this man I not only do not love him, but Heaven help me! I am beginning already to hate him!"

"These first loves are deceptive," said Mr. Parkhurst, still acting the part of an unworthy advocate of his own interests. "They are often mere fancies which die out with time. Take time to consider."

Miss Helen Dixon, a stenographer of Bloomington, Ill., was arrested and jailed for taking $1,300 from the funds of the Gleaner Society. She claimed to have sent the money to her brother, but could not give his address. Two Chicago girls drew a crowd when they appeared with faces half covered with court plaster and carrying scent in a watering pot. When a policeman accosted them he was mobbed. The girls had joined the Sigma Tau Society. Mrs. Clarence Mackay of Roslyn, Long Island, who had given $65,000 to build a church has had a row with the rector and he has resigned. He objected because the plans had been made by the late Stanford White who was killed by Harry Thaw.

After long continued efforts the women of Paris may become cab drivers if they pass the requisite examination. The chief objection has been that no woman had been found who could back a horse on a straight line. Two have recently qualified and are now driving cabs like men.

Misses Gertrude MacDowell and Jane Condit are two young women of the Methodist Church, Verona, N. J., who have a kindergarten where mothers may leave their children while they listen to the ser-mon. The mothers express themselves as greatly pleased with the arrangement, as does the pastor.

Miss Helen Cannon, daughter of the Speaker—

Alice Courtwright, aged twenty-two, daughter of a clergyman, and the thirteenth of seventeen children, has been sentenced to two months in the Chicago Home for Girls to break her from excessive talking. Her brothers and sisters had her shut up as they charge that she is ruining their social position by her everlasting talking. She claims that she is being persecuted and will employ a lawyer in her defense. She has a wonderful command of language and simply pours it out in a flood, often quite regardless of truth. She paralyzed court and stenographers on trial and was a strong witness against herself.

Glancing over the directions the governess saw that all the letters were from strangers, except one from Mrs. Murray, which she agerly opened. The contents were melancholy and unexpected. Mr. Hammond had been very ill for weeks, was not now in immediate danger, but was confined to his room; and the physicians thought that he

The breeze swept over the cluster of Tuscan jasmine and the tall, snowy phlox nodding in the green vase on the table. After a while Felix took his chin from the window-sill, and his eyes from the sparkling, tossing water, and his gaze sought the beloved countenance of his governess.

Her dress was of white mull, with lace gathered around the neck and wristbands; a delicate fringy fern leaf was caught by the cameo that pinned the lace collar, and around the heavy coil of hair at the back of her head, Hattle had twined a spray of scarlet tecoma.

Save the faint red on her thin, flexible lips, her face was as stainless as that of the Hebrew Mary, in a carved ivory "Descent from the Cross," which hung over the mantelpiece.

As the boy watched her he thought the beautiful eyes were larger and deeper, and burned more brilliantly than ever before; and the violet shadows beneath them seemed to widen day by day, telling of hard study and continued vigils.

"Oh! yonder comes mamma and—Uncle Grey! No; that is not my Uncle Grey. Who can it be? It is—Sir Roger!"
Hattie ran out to meet her mother, who had been to New York; and Felix frowned, took up his crutches, and put on his hat.
Edna turned and went to her own room, and in a few moments Hattie brought her a package of letters, and a message from Mrs. Andrews, desiring her to come back to the sitting-room.

Glancing over the directions the governess saw that all the letters were from strangers, except one from Mrs. Murray, which she uttered again and again to him rat the head Mrs. Murray is fixed mrs hurray to write, and Brws. Murray to write, and Brws. Murray, to def Mrs. Murray to write, and Brws. Murray to write, and Brws. Murray to write, and bers and Edna trea hat the back of her hespatkling. Murray would come to him, and prevent was in Europe with Gordon, and the space wi him.

Now, when she had only to say, "Come!" and he would be with her, she sternly denied her starving heart, and instead of bread gave it stones and serpents.

She took her pen to answer the letter, but a pang which she had learned to understand told her that she was not now strong enough; and, swallowing some medicine which Dr. Howell had prescribed, she snatched up a crimson scarf and went down to the beach.

The serenity of her countenance had broken up in a fearful tempest, and her face writhed as she hurried along to overtake Felix. Just now she dreaded to be alone, and yet the only companionship she could endure was that of the feeble cripple, whom she had learned to love, as woman can love only when all her early idols are in the dust. "Wait for me, Felix."

The boy stopped, turned, and limped back to meet her, for there was a strange, pleading intonation in her mournfully sweet voice. "What is the matter, Miss Earl? You look troubled."

"I only want to walk with you, for I feel val?"

someoody to love me. My heart turns to you."

She passed her arm around the boy's shoulders and leaned against him, while he rested on his crutches and looked up at her with fond pride.

"Edna! I have wanted to call you so since the day I first saw you. You know very well that I love you better than everything else in the world. If there is any good in me, I shall have to thank you for it; if ever I am useful, it will be your work. I am wicked still; but I never look at you without trying to be a better boy. You do not need me—you who are so great and gifted; whose writings everybody reads and admires; whose name is already famous. Oh! you cannot need any one, and, least of all, a poor little helpless cripple! who can only worship you, and love the sound of your voice better than all the music that ever was played! If I thought that you, Miss Earl—whose book all the world is talking about—if I thought you really cared for me—Oh, Edna! Edna! I believe my heart would be too big for my poor little body!"

"Felix, we need each other. Do you suppose I would have followed you out here, if I did not prefer your society to that of others?"

"Something has happened since you sat looking out of the window an hour ago. Your face has changed. What is it, Edna? Can't you trust me?"

"Yes. I received a letter which troubles me. It announces the feeble health of a dear and noble friend, who writes begging me to come to him, and nurse and remain with him as long as he lives. You need not start and shiver so—I am not going. I shall not leave you; but it distresses me to know that he has asked an impossible thing. Now you can understand why I did not wish to be alone."

that he has asked an impossion through you can understand why I did not wish to be alone."

She leaned her cheek down on the boy's head, and both stood silent, looking over the wide heaving waste of waters.

A glowing orange sky overarched an orange ocean. As the rising waves broke along the beach, the stiffening breeze bent the spray till it streamed like silvery plumes; and the low musical murmur swelled to a monotonous moan, that seemed to come over the darkening waters like wails of the lost from some far, far "isles of the sea."

Awed by the mysterious solemnity which ever broods over the ocean, Felix slowly repeated that dirge of Tennyson's, "Break, break, break!" and when he commenced the last verse, Edna's voice, low and quivering, joined his.

The wind rose and fluttered Edna's scarlet scarf like a pirate's pennon, and the low moan became a deep, sullen, ominous mutter.

"There will be a gale before daylight; it is brewing down yonder at the southwest.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This is the ninth article in this department and we invite you all to read the introduction appearing in January issue where first article appeared.

BY JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY.

(An incident of the flood in Massachusetts, May 16, 1874.)

(An incident of the nood in Massachusetts, Ma. No song of a soldier riding down To the raging fight at Winchester town;
No song of a time that shook the earth
With the nation's three at a nation's birth;
But the song of a brave man, free from fear
As Sheridan's self or Paul Revere;
Who risked what they risked—free from strife
And its promise of glorious pay—his life.

The peaceful valley has waked and stirred,
And the answering echoes of life are heard;
The dew still clings to the trees and grass,
And the earlier toilers smiling pass,
As they glance aside at the white-walled homes,
Or up the valley where merrily comes
The brook that sparkles in diamond rills
As the sun comes over the Hampshire hills.

What was it that passed like an ominous breath?
Like a shiver of fear or a touch of death?
What was it? The valley is peaceful still,
And the leaves are afre on the top of the hill;
It was not a sound, nor a thing of sense—
But a pain, like a pang in the short suspense
That wraps the being of those who see
At their feet the gulf of eternity.

The air of the valley has felt the chill;
The workers pause at the door of the mill
The housewife, keen to the shivering air,
Arrests her foot on the cottage stair,
Instinctive taught by the mother-love;
And thinks of the sleeping ones above.

Why start the listeners? Why does the course Of the millstream widen? Is it a horse—"Hark to the sound of his hoofs!" they say, "That gallops so wildly Williamsburg way!"

God! what was that, like a human shriek, From the winding valley? Will nobody speak; Will nobody answer those women who cry As the awful warnings thunder by?

Whence come they? Listen! And now they hear The sound of the galloping horse-hoofs near; They watch the trend of the vale, and see The rider, who thunders so menacingly, With waving arms and warning scream To the home-filled banks of the valley stream. He draws no rein, but he shakes the street With a shout and the ring of galloping feet, and this the cry that he flings to the wind: "To the hills for your lives! The flood is behind?"

He cries and is gone; but they know the worst—
The treacherous Williamsburg dam has burst!
The basin that nourished their happy homes
Is changed to a demon—It comes! It comes!
A monster in aspect, with shaggy front of shattered dwellings to take the brunt
Of the dwellings they shatter—white-maned and hoarse,
The mercliess terror fills the course
Of the narrow valley, and rushing raves,
With death on the first of its hissing waves,
Till cottage and street and crowded mill
Are crumbled and crushed. But onward still,
In front of the roaring flood is heard
The galloping horse and the warning word.

Thank God, that the brave man's life is spared! Thank God, that the brave man's life is spared! From Williamsburg town he nobly dared To race with the flood and to take the road In front of the terrible swath it mowed. For miles it thundered and crashed behind, But he looked shead with a steadfast mind; "They must be varned!" was all he said, As away on his terrible ride he sped. When heroes are called for, bring the crown To this Yankee rider; send him down On the stream of time with the Curtius old; His deed, as the Roman's, was brave and bold. And the tale can as noble a thrill awake, For he offered his life for the people's sake.

Lesson Talk

OTH of the selections given this month are spirited and require a rather dramatic delivery. There are few audiences which will not appreciate them. I have had several pieces sent in with a request to publish them with a lesson talk. Some of these selections are longer than we have room to print, you can easily tell by those printed how long a selection we can use. As soon as I can find space for them I will print some of the shorter ones. Always inclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope when you wish a personal reply. Cousin Hal.

A Scene of Horror.

The young man who sat in the window of the eighteenth story of the Colossus building balanced himself neatly on the window ledge and surveyed the eddying noonday throng beneath him. There was an air of elegance and self poise about him that bespoke a man of leisure and refinement.

refinement.
Suddenly he heard the mad clang of a bell down the street, and with a quick motion turned to see a fire engine rushing up the crowded thoroughfare. A second later a cry of borror arose. In his eagerness the young man had lost his balance and was falling with lightning speed to the street below.

The faces of the thousands who saw the frightful leap were pale with terror as the young man's body, striking a projecting sign in his flight, bounded far out into the street. Women wept, and strong men turned their blanched faces aside. With a horrible thud the falling figure reached the granite pavement midway of the street.

The fire engine, with maddened steeds and heavy, rumbling wheels, was close at hand. In vain the frightened driver tried to check the precipitous speed of his horses. As well might he stop the ball at the cannon's mouth. Almost before the crowd could know what had occurred the flying engine had reached the prostrate form and passed directly over it. IV.

IV.

Save for the low sobs of some anguished woman and the muffled exclamations of horror from the men, the crowd was completely hushed. Two of the bravest men in the awed assemblage sprang forward, together with a stout policeman, and stood above the form of the young man. The policeman turned away with a sad face and started for the patrol box.

But ere he had taken two steps the figure on the pavement straightened out, the young man arose, dusted his clothes off lightly with his handkerchief and started to walk away.

"Hold on," said the officer. "You're injured."

"I guess not," replied the young man, as he airily lighted a cigarette. "I am a college football player."—

Here is something a little different from anything you have had. It frequently happens that the best humorous selections are in prose, and, as some of you have expressed a preference for that style, I will try to print one now and then. The above selection is especially good for an encore. Commence in an easy conversational tone. With the words, "Suddenly he heard the mad clang of a bell," start and throw your head up as though listening. From this until the final denouement let your delivery be as dramatic as possible without overdoing, and thus giving yourself away. The audience must be kept in ignorance of the final form the secone in III vividly. Let the eye follow the young man in his downward descent. The women probably wring their hands, and the men may have covered their eyes as they turned away. Bring the word "thud" out quickly, letting the hand go down with a jerk, then come up slightly, to indicate the way in which the body struck and then rebounded. A new horror is added to the scene in III. In the worst scenes look as though you were fairly sick with horror. The expression around the mouth is quite as important as the eyes. You must work yourself and your audience up to the highest tension before the final "plunge" into the ridiculous. Fig. 45 gives gesture for the last line in III. future with bright, cheery letters.

Dear Comport Sistres:

Since my letter in Comport last September, I've received one hundred and fifty letters. How kind the sisters of our band are! And all sent me a piece for my qualt, some sending five or six. I tried at first to answer all, but, dear! my hand clove to the pencil. I would have to borrow a type-writer and write day and night, so I beg Comport to help me out. I had only a floursack of Zinnia seeds and it will take a ton to go around, but don't fear, I will get around in time; and so many have asked me about Texas, I stopped my work and wrote as they wanted to move here. Now thanking you all again,

MRS. A. PITTS, Bobbin, Tex.

you all again, Mrs. A. Pitts, Bobbin. Tex.

Dear Sisters:

Will you let another sister and shut-in chat with you for a few minutes? I am five feet tall, I have blue eyes and dark hair. I am a shut-in. I have not been out of my chair for six long, weary years, except when someone helps me.

I like to read Comfort very much. I read all the sisters' letters. I can sympathize with the dear shut-ins for I am one myself. I would enjoy any kind of pieced or patched work, twelve by twelve inches. I will return the favor in any way possible.
I can neither knit nor sew. I have a few nice quilt patterns that I will send to any who will send a self-addressed, stamped envelope. I would enjoy any the sisters would like to send.

A good remedy for teething babies is a string of beads made of elder roots and tied around baby's neck. Now I expect you will say there is no good in that, but I have tried it myself, and have utmost confidence in it.

Now I hope that some of you kind sisters will see fit to write me a long, cheerful letter, and if my strength and means will permit I will answer each one. Your shut-in-sister,

SISTERS OF COMFORT:
Nearly three years ago the writer asked for something to read, a few loving letters to cheer and comfort her after losing her dear old home by fire. I received three hundred and fifty replies. Today another belated COMFORT messenger reached me, asking, as hundreds had previously done, "Tell me about yourself; are you still a shut-in-rather a shut-out from home? Are you in need of the necessities of life?" I have laid awake at night, longing to express my loving appreciation and heartfelt thanks to one and all who have cheered and comforted me. Alas! I am still an invalid. I have no earthly hope of being anything else; but thanks to the kindest, best of neighbors, we are again self-supporting, with our new store and two-room house now all free of debt. It will surprise some of COMFORT'S friends to learn how far-reaching is the power for good exerted by this priceless magazine. Not only did I receive papers, books and pieces of silk, but so many helpful things so badly needed, so gratefully received. Although comfortable, I am not yet able to buy all the reading I need. I wish those who can would still keep me in remembrance.

In return for all your goodness to me, I will try to say or do something to bless and cheer the lives of others, as I have been encouraged and helped to help myself. God bless one and alt!

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

Since my letter was published I have received many helpful letters. I thank all who were kind, enough to write, send books, scraps and souvenir postal cards; some sent no address, not even name, so I could not answer, but I thank you all. I surely appreciate every little token of remembrance. You who have never had my experience cannot imagine what a pleasure it is to get so many nice things. I thank all and our dear editor for every kindness to me. May God bless and care for all!

That rushed but to conquer, when thou led'st

Alas! they have perished in far hilly regions,
And all save the fame of their triumph is gone!
The trumpet may drown the loud cannon's rattle!

My Mother Was a Lady

Two drummers sat at dinner
In a grand hotel one day,
While dining they were chatting
In a jolly sort of way,
But when a pretty waitress
Brought them a tray of food,
They spoke to her familiarly
In manner rather rude.
At first she did not notice them,
Or make the least reply,
But one remark was passed
That brought the teardrops to her eyes
And facing her tormentors
With cheeks now burning red,
She looked a perfect picture
As appealingly she said:

CHORUS.

"My mother was a lady
Like yours you will allow,
And you may have a sister,
Who needs protection now.
I've come to this great city
To find a brother dear,
And you wouldn't dare insult me, sir,
If Jack were only here."

It's true one touch of nature
Makes the whole world akin;
And every word she uttered
Seemed to touch their hearts within.
They sat there stunned and silent
Until one cried in shame:
"Forgive me, Miss, I meant no harm;
Pray, tell me, what's your name?"
She told him and he cried again:
"I know your brother, too;
We've been friends for many years,
And he often speaks of you.
He'll be so glad to see you,
And if you'll only wed,
I'll take you to him as my wife,
For I love you since you said:"

Old Dog Tray

The morn of life is past,
And evening comes at last;
It brings me a dream of a once happy day,
Of merry forms I've seen,
Upon a village green,
Sporting with my old dog Tray.

CHORUS.

Old dog Tray's ever faithful, Grief cannot drive him away, He's gentle, he is kind; I'll never, never find A better friend than old dog Tray.

The forms I called my own, Have vanished one by one,
The loved ones, the dear ones have all passed away,
Their happy smiles have flown,
Their gentle voices gone,
I've nothing left but old dog Tray.

CHORUS.

When thoughts recall the past, His eyes are on me cast, I know that he feels what my breaking heart would say,

Although he cannot speak,
I'd vainly, vainly seek,
A better friend than old dog Tray.

CHORUS.

CHAPTER I.

YOU HAVE A MISSION IN LIFE.

WANT you to see everything, all the crude impossibilities, and the still cruder possibilities of my future."

A man's voice spoke these words with a certain diffident tremble in it, which would have told his story to anyone, how his very life seemed to hang upon the verdict of the charming ruddy-haired girl by his side.

Her fair face flamed, but she managed to reply steadily:

"It is very interesting."
Nervously he shifted the reins, as he said passionately:

"Please think it is something more than in-messionately:

"Please think it is something more than interesting, Violet."

The girl hesitated, then asked softly:

"Will you explain again, so I can understand perfectly?"

"Certainly, it is not such a great story, but it is all I have. All about here is land I own. Before the war it belonged to my grandfather, Archibald Griffith. He had been educated at Harvard, and unlike the rest of the family, he developed remarkable commercial instincts, and also saw very clearly the coming of the war. Quietly, he disposed of as many of his slaves as possible, invested largely in Northern securities, and during the war which devastaed the land of his birth, he coined money, until his name was a powerful one on Wall street.

"My father was a dreamer, somewhat of an invalid, who on a visit here, married a lovely daughter of one of the families ruined by the daughter of one of the families ruined by the war, and not long after my birth, he died.

"Almost the first thing I can remember is my mother's voice, saying:
"Son you have a mission in life."

The horses took their own time along the road, filled with ruts, seeming to comprehend that the couple gave them but little attention. "Mother taught me year by year what she considered my duty towards the descendants of those who had helped grandfather make his first fortune, and I hoped to bring her with me here but father needed her most, PITIFUL REMINDERS OF THE

The girl studied the young man, with his handsome face broad browed and stern jawed. It was the face of a man who had the brain to conceive and the resolution to carry out great plans.

Suddenly he pointed with his whip towards a group of three children, all of whom were gazing curiously at the two.
"Those three come of as many families, and are descended on both sides from slaves owned by grandfather. The flesh and blood that be-gat them earned my grandfather the money which enabled him to save our family from utter desolation, and to leave me millions, which I do not want."

I do not want."

"But they are black," Violet Nestleton said softly. Until she had met this young man of Northern breeding with Southern blood in his veins, she had given but little thought to the darker race, but, filled wth her love for him, looking through his eyes at these three, she realized the pitiful side of the race question, and began to honor her lover for his high resolutions. lutions.

"It is a grand conception, but can you carry it out?" she whispered.

The man's face flushed, his eyes brightened, and he turned toward her eagerly:

"You can see it?" he asked.
"Only dimly, tell me some more," was her

"I do not seek to do that, or to encourage want to give them a chance to make their own status, something to be desired, and to give them a living chance."

Violet smiled her appreciation, and the young man encouraged, laid one hand over her little, white one, saying in a very low tone:

"Violet, my father was very much imbued with this idea, and it was my mother's life, so when I was born they gave me my singular name, "Memento.' I have always been called Toto by my friends and relatives, but I am proud of the old name they gave me."

"It is something of which to be proud," whispered the girl.

She had known it was coming, but when he asked her the great question so simply, it took her by surprise, and she hesitated.

"I know I am asking a great deal," he continued a little sadly, "but, dear, my work has become a part of my life. It is so sacred, that not even for you can I give it up. I love you, and I want you for my wife more than I ever believed it possible for a man to, but even as I tell you of this love, I have to say that I can not come to you unfettered."

Her face was very much flushed. She loved him with all her heart, but no girl, however devoted she may be, cares to share the man of her choice, even if be a feeling of duty.

"This old, old town has fallen into decay. It bears the name of my family, Griffithville.

bears the name of my family, Griffithville. Over yonder you can see Griffith Point. Out there is Griffith Lake, and there is Lover's Lane in which all the men of our family have plighted troth with the women of their love." "Are there any white people here?" Violet asked wonderingly.

"There will be when I get fairly commenced. First I am going to tear down the shanties these long-suffering people occupy, and replace them with nice, neat cottages, which they can buy from me at rental rates, for I do not intend to represe so your Then I am going to debuy from me at rental rates, for I do not intend to pauperize anyone. Then I am going to develop the natural resources of these wonderful pine woods. The gray moss which makes the woods here so beautiful, will make fine mattresses; there are enough varieties of wood in that timber there to keep half-a-dozen mills busy. Some of this land is still virgin soil, and it is to be turned into farms, which can be bought upon easy terms. Right here where a Revolutionary grandfather of mine was killed defending American liberties, I am going to erect a monument in the form of a public library. Over there will be the post-office building; around the corner the city hall and theater. Right down here in the midst of utter ruin, I am going to build a new Griffithville, ruin, I am going to build a new Griffithville, that will reflect credit on our old family, and make happy those who have helped us gain our money our money."

Still Violet was silent. It was beautiful, but this man was talented, capable of shining in political and social life, and to bury himself in this long dead place, and her with him, it was too great a sacrifice.

too great a sacrifice.

"I am going to rebuild the magnificent old Griffith mansion, according to plans which have been preserved, and we will be surrounded with plenty and happiness, I hope."

"But what will you do for society?" Violet asked timidly, wishing that she could rise to his heights.

Conducted by Cousin Marion

In order that each cousin may be answered a this column, no cousin must ask more than hree questions in one Month,

ERE we are in the first month of spring, cousins all, but I am sure most of us, this side of Florida and other summer latitudes, haven't put on our thin dresses yet. Still, March is a spring month and we must say good by to winter. And with the spring comes the glad times again, when all the world begins to bud and blossom, and the birds to sing, and we must take on the fresh, new life ourselves, and lift up our spirits from the frost. Spring is a good time, even as early as March, and I am sure we are all glad to welcome the etherial goddess. At the same time we mustn't forget that work is with us all the time, and we must do what is set before us. do what is set before us.

The first letter I open is from Cousin Dorisa of The first letter I open is from Cousin Dorisa of Alton, Pa., who is a poor girl working for her living, and with health that cannot stand the burdens of labor. She is only nineteen, and a rich man loves her and is waiting for her answer. She does not know whether to marry him or not, as she does not love him, though she does not love any other. What do the cousins say? My advice to her is to marry him. She says he is a good man and loves her very much. I think she is running small risk of being unhappy, and she most assuredly will improve her material condition very much. As a rule I do not believe in one marrying when in doubt, but this is an exception.

M. L. C., Charlestown, W. Va.—Your doubt under the circumstances is natural enough, and you will be wise to wait and see if he really means what he says. I can hardly imagine he is trying to deceive you, for his letter reads sincere, and he must think a great deal of you, or he would not ask you to marry him, knowing that you are afflicted as you are. Let him come to see you and get to know him as well as you can.

as well as you can.

M. E., Steeds, N. C.—If he wants the other girl instead of you, you cannot make him want you. You will have to give him up. Love is not to be gained when it is lost to another. I am sorry, but the law cannot be changed.

White Lily, Salem, III.—Be pleasant to him whenever you meet him and try, without letting him notice, to draw him your way. If he loves you at all, he will respond, and if he does not love you, you must lose him. (2) Yes. (3) Usually a girl who is very popular with men is not popular with other girls. One reason is she does not care whether they like her or not, and the other is they are jealous of her popularity with men.

Ruth, Payne, S. C.—If you love him and he loves Ruth, Payne, S. C.—If you love him and he loves you, just wait and see your dreams come true. He hasn't any motive in remaining silent. He isn't old enough to have a motive. He is a silly boy yet, and when he is old enough to vote he will be different. Don't you worry.

Sunflower, Onawa, Ia.—Unless you are engaged to the man, don't you think you are making rather a public exhibition of yourself to go to the depot to see him where he is employed on the road? Even engaged girls do not go that far, unless there are good reasons for it.

Gray Eyes, Jackson, Miss.—Don't have anything o do with him. Don't wave at trainmen when hey wave at you, or any other time. Don't whistle Puzzled Girl, Oakland, Cal.—You have plenty of time to wait a year or two for him. By that time you will know your own heart better. The fact that he is of Spanish extraction should be no objection, if he is an American citizen, and all right in other vectors.

Hopes and Wishes, Linton, Ind.—If her mother is satisfied with that sort of conduct in her daughter, the rest of us have no right to offer other rules. A fourteen-year-old girl should be in school, not in love. He does not seem to be much in love with her, and I am rather glad he isn't. He could so easily find a nicer sweetheart.

Blue Bell, Clarence, Mo.—If you write to him to come back to you, it will frighten him so he never will come. Try it and see. Maybe I am mistaken. Yusuf, Palace, Ind.—Those are the usual signs of love, and I believe you are in love with him. The heart does not thrill and the cheeks do not redden when you meet other men, and only for this one. So, my dear, you must be in love.

Blue-eyed Elaine, Lebanon Junction, Ky.—You

Blue-eyed Elaine, Lebanon Junction, Ky.—You are in too great a hurry and are too afraid of becoming an old maid. He does not come to see you because you live too far out of the way, and he doesn't love you that much, yet. Maybe he will after awhile, but he will not if you get too anxious and try to force him to declare himself. You are just now at the silly age—not quite a girl and not quite a woman.

M. S. B. C., Parkersburg, W. Va.—Unless engaged to a man you should not accept presents of jewelry from him, whether you are fifteen or fifty. As you are fifteen, and he may be fifty and the friend of your parents, and wants to give you jewelry on their account, you may accept. (2) One sweetheart is all a girl can have. Any others are not genuine, and she is false herself.

Brown-eyed Dolly, Warsaw, N. Y.—Tobacco chewing is not a very pleasant habit, but if the young man is perfect outside of that, I think you might let him have one weakness. It will be a vent and thus check some other worse one. You mustn't look for absolute perfection. You can break him of chewing by declining to kiss him as long as he chews. Or you might try a chew yourself and let him see how nasty the habit is. (2) I think you have done wisely to tell him you will marry him in four years. (3) Engagement rings are usual to engaged couples, but I think I would not ask one, if I were you, till six months before you are to marry. You might wear one out in four years.

Brown Eyes, Chicago, Ill.—Don't throw him over in pique that way, because he may be a little cool in his ardor. You be that much nicer to him, only don't let him know that you are doing it for his sake only. Make him understand that that is your natural way. A man isn't going to lose a pleasant-mannered, good-natured woman, if he can help it. They are too scarce. Let on as if you didn't notice he was cool, and he will get over his chill. If he does not after a fair trial, then freeze him and find another.

Skiden Ford City Pa —Why write to him if he Skidoo, Ford City, Pa.—Why write to him if he will not answer your letters? Stop writing. (2) Don't be flirting with the office boy! You can't be very ambitious. And he younger than you, too. I'm ashamed of you, cousin. (3) Ask your mother, or your employer. He can answer probably better or your employer. He

E. B., Lang, Assinaboine.—Between two stools one E. B., Lang, Assinaboine.—Between two stools one falls to the ground, and you will be dropping if you are not careful. The better plan for you, as you don't know which of the two to choose, is to choose neither, and wait until you know what you want. (2) You should not accept a watch and chain from a man to whom you are not engaged.

worthy young man that your parents do not want you to marry until you are older, he will not object to waiting. Seventeen is at least four years too young to marry, but you might compromise on two. In any event do not marry before you are twenty-one without your parents' consent.

Troubled Clara, Pt. Marion, Pa.—If the young man is objected to by your parents because he ought to be, then you should obey them and not see him, even though you are of age. If he is worthy and can support you, and will make the right kind of a husband, and you love each other truly, then you may risk the displeasure of your parents. But take no chances, simply because you have a notion that he is the one, and they don't know anything.

There, my dears, all your questions have the answers given to them, and I don't think I have scolded even a little bit, have I? Anyway, if I have, I wasn't very cross, and I didn't mean any harm. On the contrary, all I think of is your good. Now, by, by, until we meet again.

Cousin Marion.

"For what purpose?" Ralph asked.

"To join my father."

"Did you meet him?"

"Yes," the sweet face was turned aside in shame,

"Miss Lyster—" Ralph began, when the girl in terrupted him:

"You are very kind, Mr. Dayton, but I am not Sylvia Lyster in fact, but Helen Hollis."

"What?" Ralph cried.

"Yes, I am the daughter of James Hollis, and it was he who drove me out into that wretched passageway, with his blow upon my face, from which your superior officer delivered me," and now tears streamed down the lovely face.

"Miss Lyster, I will call you that, I think there has been some dreadful mistake," Ralph said gravely. "Mr. Lyster was so much concerned. If you had been his own flesh and blood, he could not have grieved more. If you are what has been represented, it has made no difference to him, but somehow I do not believe in the thing. Tell me, did you ever see the man before who claims to be your father?"

The girl shook her head.

your father?"
The girl shook her head.
"Or a man by the name of Percy Mandeville?"
A dull red flamed the girl's face, up into her hair and down into her neck, as she replied, clenching

her fists:
"Yes I know him, and I hate him!"

her fists:

"Yes I know him, and I hate him!"

"Report has it, excuse me, but I must tell you, report has it that you eloped with him."

"With him? Why, Mr. Dayton, he is a thief, a man who ought to serve the remainder of his life at Sing Sing for all his evil deeds. I have been a very wicked woman, for I kept silent when I ought to have spoken."

"What is it you know?" Ralph asked gently, his sympathy given to this girl so far away from those who loved her.

"I know that he used to steal jewels and money from the people he met in society, but I spared him on account of his wife."

"His wife? Is he married?"

"Yes to a lovely girl, whom he has not acknowledged socially, however."

"Did you let him know you had discovered him?"

"Yes, when he had taken a necklace of pearls belonging to me. I promised to hold my tongue, if he would mend his ways, and I hoped that he would, but I fear not."

Ralph shook his head, then he said slowly:

"I want to know why Jim Hollis had you come out here."

"Must I tell that, too?"

"I want to know why Jim Hollis had you come out here."

"Must I tell that, too?"

"My dear Miss Lyster, I do not believe that you are Jim's daughter. He is a desperate criminal, who will have to pay for his many crimes with his life, and I do not believe that he is your father. I am going to telegraph to Mr. Lyster, simply to ask for particulars of your adoption. After I get a reply, I can know how to act."

"Thank you very much," the girl said simply, then continued:

"Under such circumstances, or even under any, I suppose I must tell. Mr. Dayton, that man had me brought here so I could be trained to become a criminal. He thought I would lend myself to such a scheme."

"Is that why he struck you?" Ralph asked, glancing at her swollen face.

"Yes."

The young man's fists clenched, and he muttered ing at her swollen face.

"Yes."

The young man's fists clenched, and he muttered something under his breath. The young face looked so pitiful, all swollen as it was because of the brutality of a human fiend.

Ralph asked the girl a few more questions, and then left her, telling her that he would let her hear from him as soon as he gained anything definite.

A few minutes more were consumed in thanking Mrs. Haddam for her kindness, and assuring her of Crit's appreciation of her promptness to respond to his call, and then Chick hurried to the nearest local telegraph station, from which he sent the following wire, addressed to Mr. Frederick Lyster of New York City.

"Wire full particulars adoution of missing girl.

"Wire full particulars adoption of missing girl. "Wire full particulars adoption of missing gen-was she the daughter of a criminal woman who died in workhouse, Blackwell Island? Did she come from orphan asylum? Have definite clue, but need particulars. Come on if possible."

When this message, signed "Truman" was received, it stirred to the depths, not only Mr. Lyster, but the haggard-appearing Custer Quex, and the two men, without waiting for any preparations, took the next train to Chicago, where they hoped to answer all questions in the telegram, in person, and to discover what was meant by the "definite clue."

Read the next chapter, "A Bold Abduction," when Sylvia Lyster is spirited away, and carried by force into a hall reeking with unsavory odors. Watch the coils as they slowly tighten around the guilty, bringing them to speedy and just punishment. If not a subscriber send 15 cents and read this story to the end.

She now resides in her own palatial brown-stone She now resides in her own palatial residence, and is considered one of the most successful business women in the United States.

Mrs. Miller's New Residence Earned in Less Than One Year.

Several years ago Mrs. Miller learned of a mild and simple preparation that cured herself and several friends of female weakness and piles. She was besieged by so many women needing treatment that she decided to furnish it to those who might call for it. She started with only a few dollars' capital, and the remedy, possessing true and won-derful merit, producing many cures when doctors and other remedies failed, the demand grew so rapidly she was several times compelled to seek larger quarters. She now occupies one of the city's largest office buildings, which she owns, and almost one hundred clerks and stenographers are required to assist in this great business

Million Women Use It.

More than a million women have used Mrs. Miller's remedy, and no matter where you live, she can refer you to ladies in your own locality who can and will tell any sufferer that this marvelous remedy really cures women. Miller, Box 4609, Kokomo, Ind., and receive by mail (free of charge in plain wrapper) a 50-cent box of her marvelous medicine; also her valuable book, which every woman should have.

In order to meet the demand for information made by COMFORT readers on the kindred subjects of Etiquette and Personal Appearance, this column will be devoted to them, and all questions will be answered, but no inquirer shall ask more than two questions each month. We would suggest to readers to cut this column out and paste it in a scrap book. Address letters to Etiquette Editor, COMFORT, Augusta Maine.

Lonesome Girl, Jamestown, N. D.—If the "valuable present" is from one who is not privileged to give such to a lady, you should return it at once, with a pleasant note of explanation why you cannot accept it. (2) The plain gold ring is the wedding ring. An engagement ring is usually a diamond.

Tootsie, Euka, Mo.—It is quite proper to receive letters from a gentleman friend, if no one, who has a right, offers any objection. Still, girls of sixteen should not be writing to men, or receiving letters from them. Better be in school learning how to write and spell and speak correctly, as so many girls of sixteen do not. (2) No kissing until after the engagement. (3) Boys and girls usually call each other by their first names. It is quite correct, though, if you want to add the Mr. to his name.

J. C., Buxton, Ia.—It is very simple to travel in a sleeping car and you can be just as much at home in one as by your own fireside, only you won't find it so convenient going to bed and getting up, especially if you have an upper berth. Get a lower if you possibly can for so long a trip. Ladies are always given the preference. Wear anything dark and comfortable. Traveling is not a dress affair. Take a suit case and a little hand bag with your toilet articles, though you may put them in your suit case if you wish. It is not quite so handy. The porter will show you your section—get your sleeper ticket several days in advance, so you can have choice—and there you sit down and take it easy, going to your meals when called—two a day are better than three—and to bed at night when your berth is made down. This will be rather a serious undertaking at first, but get in behind the curtains and get out of your clothes the best way you can. Some timid women sleep in most of their clothes, except the outside garments and their shoes. The porter will tell you where the wash room, or lavatory, is, and be sure to make your toilet as quickly as you can so the other women may have a chance. The porter will tell you anything else you want to know. Give him a quarter at the journey's end. Be careful about the acquaintances you make, having them among the women largely. Watch what other people, who have traveled, do, and you will not make any mistakes that count for much. Let the conductor take your conductors are usually very polite and considerate.

Topsy Tury, Georgetown, Ky.—You may ask anyone to exchange post cards with you. (2) There is no harm in writing friendly letters to a young man. But don't write love letters to him, unless you mean what you say. Even then, it is better said than written. (3) The brother may ask another girl. Young men are nearly always glad to help-eac

K. M. S., Columbus, S. C.—You can get a pair of rubber gloves from any good drug store in your town, or can find out where. They cost from half a dollar up, and are not worth the money, as a rule.

(2) The dark circles under your eyes, as they have been there since childhood, are due to natural causes, and they cannot well be removed. You might improve the condition by a gentle massage. Rub with the finger outward and downward for a few minutes, two or three times a day. It will require some time to show results. Do not rub hard enough to redden the skin.

Maxine, Jackson, Mich.—The table at a fashionable hotel is not greatly different from the table anywhere else where propriety prevails. Yes, the lady orders from the bill of fare only what she wants. Why should she order anything else? At a table d' hote she would have to take what was brought to her, but tables d' hote do not prevail at fashionable hotels.

Anxious Boy, Purves, Texas.—She may like you,

Anxious Boy, Purves, Texas.—She may like you, but she doesn't love you. Girls in love don't act that way. She is not of the serious kind, and if you won her you would soon tire of her. If you really want to know what she thinks of you, tell her you love her and want her to be your wife. Then you'll find out, good and hard—but some folks won't learn any other way. (2) As to the one you have hardened your heart against, you should now harden your head against, and show your sense by letting bygones be bygones. Real gentlemen don't ever try to "get even" with a woman. They brace up and take their medicine. You ought to know that in Texas.

Anxious, Brass City, Conn.—It is not necessary to "serve refreshments" when friends call in the evening, but it adds very materially to the pleasure of the occasion to have a small bite to eat, and a drop to drink. Even fruit is better than nothing, if you don't believe in beer and pretzels. (2) The lady may use her pleasure in shaking hands upon introduction. Some do and some do not. The formal kind do not. Others do not when the intromal kind do not. Others do not when the several duction is merely in passing, or there are several introductions around.

Oliver, Carmi, Ill .- If he has to leave the church during the service he should wait outside, or in the rear of the church, and not return to the pew.

B. R., Herrick, Va.—Nobody can tell you whether you can get along with the children or not. If you and their father love each other very devotedly and he helps you all he can, you may find them fairly easy to handle, especially if they have dispositions such as you say their father has. The stepmother's lot is not an easy one, and you may find it too hard. Again, you may find it as easy as it ever is. Try and see. If the children like you now, you can keep them liking you, if you will.

Rosa, Chester, Miss.—You may ask your sweet-heart-to-take you somewhere, but it is safer to wait for him to ask you, especially if it is to a pay place. You can easily hint to him when you want to go, and if he takes the hint, all right. But don't force him.

Violet, Latour, Mo.—The young man, who will get drunk while acting as escort to ladies, is unfit to associate with respectable people. (2) We believe it is allowed for a man, married or not, to put his arm around a girl cousin, but a little of it should go a long way. Better not get the habit. (3) Ask the man's wife what she thinks about the ring.

Blue Eyes, Carrolton, Mo.—Unless the couple be engaged there should be no kissing. Men will always insist that it is perfectly proper, but the well-bred girl knows it is not and she will not permit it. The fact that so many unengaged persons kiss each other is no indication that it is correct. A great many, people get drunk, but that doesn't make it right.

Black Eyes, Lost River, Ind.—Obey your parents. Martha Sweetheart, Winamoc, Ind.—The man certainly could not be very much in love with you if he went away to the far West without so much as coming to say good by, when he could easily have done so. Our advice to you is to let him stay out West and forget him. He doesn't deserve the remembrance of a girl who has a heart.

Fairy, Forest, O.—Congratulate the graduating Medicos just as you would any other students, of course. Why not? Don't you think they should be congratulated? They won't kill as many as they cure. Sweetest, Ripley, Oklahoma.—Don't ask him to take you to a party, but ask him to call. Tell him you heard he was a coward. He will vow he is not. Then tell him you heard he was afraid to ask a girl to marry him, and any man is a coward who is like that. He will ask who the girl is, and then you let him guess. Be careful and don't give yourself away. Sunshine, Paris, Texas.—Blue eyes and black hair can wear any colors, if they are not too pronounced. Post Card Album That Will Hold Fifty Cards.

Our fifty-card Album is the most attractive on the market. On each page two cards may be displayed; the leaves are very heavy rigid paper stock of a heavy green shade, providing a very tasty and attractive background for all cards, and when two pages are opened together showing four cards, the appearance is extremely attractive, and one cannot neatly preserve a collection of Post Cards unless they are displayed in an Album. And better still, a very nice collection of Souvenir Postal Cards represents the individual and personal thought of absent or distant relatives and friends and they are very entertaining for visitors who enjoy looking them over; so, that in an Album, arranged in order, they are readily accessible and may be examined time after time with no harm to the Cards, and thus preserved in remembrance of the senders. No one thinks of collecting Souvenir Cards without an Album. Everyone wants an Album and the demand, just now, exceeds the supply. We are fortunate in having a great quantity on hand of first-class Albums which we are to distribute as premiums to those who will send us clubs of subscribers to this magazine as per our offer below.

ST. ELMO "As yet, sir, it is not assured. My next book will determine my status in literature; and I nave too much to accomplish—I have achieved too little, to pause and look back. I am not so indifferent as you seem to imagine. Praise gratifies, and censure pains me; but I value both as mere gauges of my work, indexing the amount of good I may or may not hope to effect. I wish to be popular—that is natural, and, surely, pardonable; but I desire it not as an end, but as a means to an end—usefulness to my fellow-creatures; 'And whether crowned or crownless, when I fall. It matters not, so as God's work is done.' I love my race, I honor my race; I believe that human nature, sublimated by Christianity, is capable of attaining nobler heights than pagan philosophers and infidel seers ever dreamed of. And because my heart yearns toward my fellow-creatures, I want to clasp one hand in the warm throbbing palm of sinful humanity, and with the other hold up the lamp that God gave me to carry through this world, and so struggle onward, heavenward, with this generation of men and women. She seemed talking rather to herself, or to the surging sea where her eyes rested, than to Sir Roger; and as he noticed the passionless pallor of her face, he sighed, and put his hands on hers. "Come, walk with me on the beach, and let me tell you why I came back to New York, instead of sailing from Canada, as I once intended." A half hour elapsed, and Mrs. Andrews, who was sitting alone on the piazza, saw the

"Yes, you must go in, Felix. I ought not to have kept you out so long."
Reluctantly she turned from the beach, and they had proceeded but a few yards in the direction of the house when they met Mrs. Andrews and her guest.

"Felix, my son! Too late, too late for you! Come in with me. Miss Earl, as you are so fond of the beach, I hope you will show Sir Roger all its beauties. I commit him to your care."

She went toward the house with her boy, and as Sir Roger took Edna's hand and bent forward, looking eagerly into her face, she saw a pained and startled expression cross

"Yes, SIr Roger, and your cordial congratulations and flattering opinion were, I assure you, exceedingly gratifying, esepcially as you were among the first who found anything in it to praise."

"You have no idea with what intense interest I have watched its reception at the hands of the press, and I think the shallow, flippant criticisms were almost as nauseous to me as they must have been to you. Your book has had a fierce struggle with these self-consecrated, red-handed, high-priests of the literary Yama; but its success is now established, and I bring you news of its advent in England, where it has been republished.

A half hour elapsed, and Mrs. Andrews, who was sitting alone on the piazza, saw the governess coming slowly up the walk. As she ascended the steps, the lady of the house exclaimed:

"Where is Sir Roger?"

"He has gone."

"Well, my dear! Pardon me for anticipating you, but as I happen to know all about the affair, accept my congratulations. You are the luckiest woman in America."

Mrs. Andrews put her arm around Edna's waist, but something in the countenance astonished and disappointed her.

"Mrs. Andrews, Sir Rogers sails tomorrow for England. He desired me to beg that you would excuse him for not coming in to bid you good by.

"Sails tomorrow! When does he return to America?"

"Probably never."

"Edna Earl, you are an idiot! You may have any amount of genius, but certainly not one grain of common sense! I have no patience with you! I had set my heart on seeing you his wife."

"But, unfortunately for me, I could not set my heart on him. I am very sorry. I wish we had never met, for indeed I like Sir Roger. But it is useless to discuss what is past and irremediable. Where are the children?"

"Asleep, I suppose. After all, show me 'a gifted woman, a genius,' and I will show you a fool."

She had crossed her arms on the low stone wall that enclosed the lawn, and bending forward, the moon shone full on her face, and her eyes and her thoughts went out to sea. Her companion stood watching her countenance, and some strange expression there recalled to his mind that vivid description:

MOTHER DIES

IN CHILD'S ARMS!

Mrs. Herbert Stanley and her nine-year-old daughter Ethel started to drive to town last Thursday morning from their home in Exeter. Mrs. Stanley had hurried to get started and seemed in her usual good health, but when less than a mile from home she suddenly cried. 'Oh, Ethel, I m so sick!' pressed both hands to her breast and sunk over against her child. The brave little girl supporting her as best she could drove to a nearby house and a physician was quickly called, but he was not needed, for he said that she was struck dead with Heart Disease even as she spoke her last with Heart Disease even as she spoke her last

A particularly sad case. All the more so because it could have been prevented, for she was warned in time. For months it had made her breath short to hurry. She had pains around the heart and several spells of palpitation. Her husband had urged her to do something for it, but she kept saying, "Oh, it's nothing the matter with my heart. I guess it's my stomach. It will get well itself, anyway!"

Many don't know it; they think it's something else and doctor the stomach, kidneys, female organs, etc., and get no better; and many who do know think it can't be cured. Now Heart Disease is just as curable as any other disease: we have proved this fully by curing thousands of cases. Many of these were the most chronic, serious, complicated kind, in which all other remedies and doctors had failed, and hope seemed gone, but our treatment cured them quickly and to stay cured! In very many cases the Nerves and Stomach are affected also, and in such it is useless to treat the heart alone, and one reason why our treatment cures is because it sets the stomach right, removes constipation, steadies and revitalizes the nerves and builds up the whole system, besides strengthening, controlling and curing the heart. We can cure YOUI no matter how bad off, and to prove it we will send you by mail, postpaid, without any conditions, without any restrictions, and without any cost, a regular full-size treatment of Dr. Fuller's Heart and Nerve Cure, and his illustrated book with which you will know your own case as well as any doctor. Both are free. Understand this is not a "sample" or "trial" but a regular full size treatment. Neither is it a C. O. HAVE YOU WEAK LUNGS

Do you spit yellow and black Are you continually coughing and hawking, have night sweats, bleeding from the lungs, or spitting of blood, pains in sides and under shoulder blades?

These were the exact symptoms present in the case of Mr. Wm. Schmidt, 1904 Coleman Street, St. Louis, Mo. (whose picture is here reproduced). This man was treated by well-known St. Louis doctors, all of whom pronounced him in an incurable stage of Consumption (Tuberculosis). After getting no encouragement from the physicians he was taken to a prominent hospital and, after a thorough examination there, was informed that his right lung was almost entirely decomposed, that his was a hopeless case of consumption, and that all medical treatment would be of no avail. After receiving all of this discouraging information, Mr. Schmidt saw Lung-Germine advortised, and ordered the treatment and began its use. The result was that he was made a well man after six months of Lung-Germine treatment had been used. This cure was established three years ago and he remains a strong and healthy man to this day; with absolutely no trace of the dread disease in his system.

moon, checkering the face of the mighty deep, now with shadow, now with sheen. So absorbed was he in his communing with the mysterious spirit of the sea, that he did not notice the entrance of the governess until he felt her hand on his shoulder.

"Ah! have you come at last? Edna. I was wishing for you a little while ago, for as I sat looking over ae waves, a pretty thought came into my mind, and I want to tell you about it. Last week, if you remember, we were reading about Antony and Cleopatra; and just now, while I was watching a large star yonder making a shining track across the sea, a ragged, hungry-looking cloud crept up, and nibbled at the edge of the star, and swallowed it! And I called the cloud Cleopatra swalowing her pearl!"

Edna looked wonderingly into the boy's bright eyes, and drew his head to her shoulder.

"My dear Felix, are you sure you never heard that same thought read or quoted? It is beautiful, but this is not the first time I have heard it. Think, my dear little boy; try to remember where you saw it written."

"Indeed, Edna, I never saw it anywhere. I am sure I never heard it either; for it seemed quite new when it bounced into my mind just now. Who else ever thought of it?"

"Mr. Stanyan Bigg, an English poet, whose writings are comparatively unknown in this country. His works I have never seen, but I read a review of them in an English book, which contained many extracts; and that pretty metaphor which you used just now, was among them."

"Is that review in our library?"

"No, I am sure it is not; but you may have seen the lines quoted somewhere else."

"Bdna, I am very certain I never heard it before. Do you recollect how it is written in the Englishman's poem? If you can repeat it, I shall know instantly, because my memory is very good."

"The clouds, like grim black faces, come and go; One tall tree stretches up against the sky;

"Edna. I look at my twisted feet some

"Edna, I look at my twisted feet sometimes, and I feel thankful that it is my body, not my mind, that is deformed. If I am ever able to tell the world anything, it will be how much I owe you; for I trace all holy thoughts and pretty ideas to you and your music and your writings."

They sat there awhile in silence, watching heavy masses of cloud darken sea and sky; and then Felix lifted his face from Edna's shoulder, and asked timidly:

"Did you send Sir Roger away?"

"He goes to Europe, tomorrow, I believe."

"Poor Sir Roger! I am sorry for him. I told mamma you never thought of him; that you loved nothing but books and flowers and music."

told mamma you never thought of him; that you loved nothing but books and flowers and music."

"How do you know that?"

"I have watched you, and when he was with you I never saw that great shining light in your eyes, or that strange moving of your lower lip, that always shows me when you are really glad; as you were that Sunday when the music was so grand; or that rainy morning when we saw the pictures of the "Two Marys at the Sepulchre.' I almost hated poor Sir Roger, because I was afraid he might take you to England, and then, what would have become of me? Oh! the world seems so different, so beautiful, so peaceful, as long as I have you with me. Everybody praises you, and is proud of you, but nobody loves you, as I do."

He took her hand, passed it over his cheek and forehead, and kissed it tenderly. "Felix, do you feel at all sleepy?"

"Not at all. Tell me something more about the animalcula that cause that phosphorescence yonder—making the top of each wave look like a fringe of fire."

"I do not feel well enough tonight to talk about animalcula. I am afraid I shall have one of those terrible attacks I had last winter. Felix, please don't go to bed for a while at least; and if you hear me call, come to me quickly. I must write a letter before I sleep. Sit here, will you, till I come back?"

For the first time in her life she shrank from the thought of suffering alone, and felt the need of a human presence.

"Edna, let me call mamma. I saw this afternoon that you were not well."

"No, it may pass off; and I want nobody about me but you."

Only a narrow passage divided her room from his; and leaving the door open, she sat down before her desk to answer Mr. Hammond's appeal.

Felix waited patiently for the voice of his governess. But no sound came from the opposite room; and at last, alarmed by the Felix waited patiently for the voice of his governess. But no sound came from the opposite room; and at last, alarmed by the ominous silence, he took up his crutches and crossed the passage.

The muslin curtains, blown from their ribbon fastenings, streamed like signals of distress on the breath of the tempest, and the lamplight flickered and leaped to the top of its glass chimney.

On the desk lay two letters addressed respectively to Mr. Hammond and Mrs. Murray, and beside them were scattered half a dozen notes from unknown correspondents, asking for the autograph and photograph of the young author.

Edna knelt on the floor, hiding her face in the arms which were crossed on the lid of the desk.

The cripple came close to her and hesitated a moment, then touched her lightly:

"Edna, are you ill, or are you only praying?"

She lifted her head instantly, and the

She lifted her head instantly, and the blanched, weary face reminded the boy of a picture of Gethsemane, which, having once seen, he could never recall without a shudder. "Forgive me, Felix! I forgot that you were waiting—forgot that I asked you to sit un."

CHAPTER XXXI.

WHAT RIGHT HAVE YOU TO PRONOUNCE HIM UNWORTHY OF TRUST?

Profoundly impressed by the conviction that she held her talent in trust, Edna worked steadily, looking neither to the right nor left, but keeping her eyes fixed upon that day when she should be called to render an account to Him who would demand his own with interest. Instead of becoming flushed with success, she grew daily more cautious, more timid, lest inadvertence or haste should betray her into errors. Consequently as the months rolled away, each magazine article seemed an improvement on the last, and lifted her higher in public favor. The blacksmith's grandchild had become a power in society.

seemed an improvement on the last, and lifted her higher in public favor. The blacksmith's grandchild had become a power in society.

Feeling that a recluse life would give her only partial glimpses of that humanity which she wished to study, she moved in the circle of cultivated friends who now eagerly stretched out their arms to receive her; and "keeping herself unspotted from the world," she earnestly scrutinized social leprosy, and calmly watched the tendency of American thought and feeling.

A casual glance at the surface of society seemed to justify Burke's conclusion, that "this earth is the bedlam of our system," but Edna looked deeper, and found much that encouraged her, much that warmed and bound her sympathies to her fellow-creatures. Instead of following the beaten track she struck out a new path, and tried the plan of denouncing the offence, not the offender; of attacking the sin while she pitted the sinner. Ruthlessly she assaulted the darling follies, the pet, yelvet-masked vices that society had adopted, and called the reading world to a Triendly parley; demanding that men and women should pause and reflect in their mad career. Because she was earnest and not bitter, because the white banner of Christian charity floated over the conference ground, because she showed so clearly that she loved the race whose recklessness grieved her, because her rebukes were free from scorn, and written rather in tears than gall, people turned their heads and stopped to listen.

Each day brought her noble fruitage, as letters came from all regions of the country, asking for advice and assistance in little trials of which the world knew nothing. Over the young of her own sex she held a singular sway; and orphan girls of all ranks and ages wrote of their respective sorrows and difficulties, and requested her kind counsel. To these her womanly heart turned yearningly; and she accepted their affectionate confidence as an indication of her proper circle of useful labor.

SIX LITTLE BACS OF PERFUME

We offer our Sachet Doilies to those who want the best, and the newest that is original, elegant and artistic. They are made of fine imported lithographed paperet in ten exquisite designs, in twenty colors, and are the finest lithographing ever imported, to America, and never before offered in this style.

The odors are the most pleasing and delicate and are imported direct from Paris, France, being made by Saint Victor et Fils, the best known makers of sachet powders in the world. The odors are made from selected flowers blended with genuine Florentine Orris Root, and for lasting and natural fragrance they are undequalled. They are made to meet the demand of delicate and refined tastes, and it is not often an article is offered that meets the popular favor as do our Sachet Doilies. Everyone who receives a Sachet Doily will be delighted and the delicate odor will be a lasting pleasure. Besides leaving them about the room on tables, shelves, etc., you will readily think of many and various uses for these dainty and handy sachets; to wear in the folds of your underwear they are invaluable, dispensing an odor that is at once very delicious, pleasing and in addition, will counteract the unpleasant odors of perspiration which glow from the body when heated. For bureau drawers to seent your clothing, to put into handkerchief cases, ribbon bags, and in the house anywhere that a dainty odor emitted from an unseen source, these little sealed sachets are sified dispensers of comforting and satisfying odors. Each doily is two and one half inches in diameter and sealed that the odor may not be at once expelled, but will remain strong for a long time, emitting just a sweet fragrance each day.

To introduce these Sachet Doilles we will present you with an assorted set of 6 for a club of two yearly subscribers to this magazine at 16 cents a year.

were the real custodians of national purity, and the sole agents who could successfully arres. the tide of demoralization breaking over the land, she addressed herself to the wives, mothers, and daughters of America; calling upon them to smite their false gods, and purify the shrines at which they worshipped. Jealously she contended for every woman's right which God and nature had decreed the sex.

Edna was conscious of the influence she exerted, and ceaselessly she prayed that she might wield it aright.

She felt that she was a target at which observers aimed random shafts; and while devoting herself to study, she endeavored to give due attention to the rules of etiquette, and the harmonious laws of the toilette.

The friendship between Mr. Manning and herself strengthened, as each learned more fully the character of the other; and an affectionate, confiding frankness marked their intercourse. As her popularity increased she turned to him more frequently for advice, for success only rendered her cautious; and day by day she weighed more carefully all that fell from her pen, dreading lest some error should creep into her writings and lead others astray.

In her publisher—an honorable, kind-hearted, and generous gentleman—she found a valued friend; and as her book sold extensively, the hope of a competency was realized, and she was soon relieved from the necessity of teaching. She was a pet with the reading public; it became fashionable to lionize her; her pictures and autographs were eagerly sought after; and the little, barefooted Tennessee child had grown up to celebrity.

Sometimes, when a basket of flowers, or a handsome book; or a letter of thanks and cordial praise was received from an unknown reaser, the young author was so overwhelmed with grateful appreciation of these little tokens of kindness and affection, that she wept over them, or prayed tremulously that she might make herself more worthy of the good opinion entertained of her by strangers.

Mr. Manning, whose cold, searching eye was ever upon her, could detect no exultation in her manner. She was earnestly grateful for every kind word uttered by her friends and admirers, for every favorable sentence God's eternal goodness remains firm, though her aims that would fructify abundantly when she was silent in the grave.

Mrs. Andrews often told her that she was the only person who had ever controlled or influenced the boy—that she could make him just what she pleased; and she devoted herself to him, resolved to spare no toil in her efforts to correct the evil tendencies of his strong, obstinate, stormy nature.

People wondered how the lovely woman, whom society flattered and feted, could voluntarily shut herself up in a schoolroom, and few understood the sympathy which bound her so firmly to the broad-browed, sallow little cripple.

One December day, several months after their return from the seaside, Edna and Felix sat in the library. The boy had just completed Prescott's "Philip II.," and the governess had promised to read to him Schiller's "Don Carlos" and Goethe's "Egmont," in order to impress upon his memory the great actors of the Netherland revolution. She took up the copy of "Don Carlos," and crossing his arms on the top of his crutches, as was his habit, the pupil fixed his eyes on her face.

The reading had continued probably a halthour, when Felix heard a whisper at the door, and, looking over his shoulder, saw a stranger standing on the threshold. He rose, the movement attracted the attention of the governess, and, as she looked up, a cry of joy rang through the room. She dropped the book and sprang forward with open arms.

"Oh, Mrs. Murray! dear friend!"

For some moments they stood locked in a warm embrace, and as Felix limped out of the room he heard his governess sobbing.

Mrs. Murray held the girl at arm's length, and as she looked at the wan, thin face, she exclaimed:

"My poor Edna! my dear little girl! why did not you tell me you were ill? You are a mere ghost of your former self. My child, why did you not come home long ago? I should have been here a month earlier, but was detained by Estelle's marriage."

Edna looked vacantly at her benefactress, and her lips whitened as she asked:

"Did you say Estelle—was married?"

Sometimes when the editor missed her at the literary reunions, where her presence always contributed largely to the enjoyment of the evening, and sought her in the school-room, he was often surprised to find her seated beside Felix, reading to him or listening to his conversation with a degree of interest which she did not always offer to the celebrities who visited her.

Her power over the cripple was boundless. His character was as clay in her hands, and she was faithfully striving to model a noble, hallowed life; for she believed that he was destined to achieve distinction, and fondly hands to stamp upon his mind principles and

The Family Doctor

So many inquiries are received by COMFORT concerning the health of the family that a column will be devoted to answering them. The remedies and advice here given are intended only for simple cases; serious cases should be referred to physicians, not to us. COMFORT readers are advised to read carefully the advertisements in this paper, as they will often find in them what they will though their questions in this column. They will thus save time, labor and postage. Address The Family Doctor Comfort, Augusta Maine.

J. R. B., Pleasant Shade, Tenn.—The trouble is not at all uncommon, and is due to nervousness, or a kind of self-consciousness. Indeed, it is rather a better sign than not, and as there is no particular necessity for your taking it into public places, you need not worry about it, and you may rest assured that it will not result fatally. It is not physical, and means nothing serious. If you have no disease worse than that you will live till you dry up and blow away.

Mrs. R. M., Goliad, Texas.—The blotches may be from liver trouble, but, as you say, your general health is good, you might try a lotion made as follows: Corrosive sublimate, ten grains; distilled witch-hazel, two ounces; rose water, two ounces. Use twice a day by mopping the spots. A teaspoonful of phosphate of soda taken every morning, or every other morning, may be of some assistance.

P. M. S., Farmersville, Ala.—With such a com-plication of diseases as you have, there is no possi-ble way of benefiting you except by putting your-self in the hands of a physician and following his instructions. Treatment by newspaper is abso-lutely impossible and of no avail.

M. S., Osseo, Wis.—The prescription you mention will remove the hair. It is one of many depilatories, and is not more injurious than any other. Any druggist will put it up for you. Yes, superfluous means excess. This is too much.

fluous means excess. This is too much.

M. E. H., Mt. Orab, O.—Indigestion is probably the trouble. Diet him on simple food, and don't let him overeat, as most youngsters are likely to do. You will never cure him if you let him eat as he pleases. Better starve him for awhile than to permit him to destroy his digestive organs.

C. O., Lindsborg, Kans.—The physician knows more about it than you do, and he is right in what he tells you, and to get your mind on other things than yourself. There is nothing the matter with you, and you will be all right unless you think yourself into an unhealthy condition.

Subscriber, Waubay, S. D.—Specks in the eye, or in the sight, are due to two causes, biliousness, or defective vision. You will have to have a physician determine what causes yours before any treatment may be offered. As treatment for biliousness is easy, you might try a dose of calomel and a careful dieting for several weeks to get your stomach and bowels and liver in proper condition. Then if the specks still continue, consult an oculist.

A. M. B., Louisa, Ky.—The radium cure for cancer turned out after trial to be about like the other so-called "cancer cures." It did some good in some instances where there was only slight development, but failed in the time of real need. If you think you have cancer, you should at once submit to examination by a physician who knows what cancer is, and is willing to tell you the truth.

Mrs. G. H., Shoals, Ind.—Malaria is largely due to climatic conditions, or conditions of the country in which one lives. If you have had it for so many years and medicine does not seem to benefit you, you will probably get relief by moving into a locality which is high and dry. A year or more may be required for it to work out of your system, but the right kind of climate will cure you, unless you have had it so long as to have undermined your constitution.

Constitution.

Cowboy, Marquette, Wyo.—What you think is toothache is not that at all, but neuralgia. Good firm teeth, as you say yours are, do not ache. It is the little nerves that lie all about the face and gums which are doing the hurting. Neuralgia is due in many instances to exposure to cold and rain, and as long as you are careless about getting wet, and about exposure to cold weather, you may expect to have your "toothache." You will have it just the same if you have every tooth taken out. A good neuralgia liniment is made of ether and chloroform, but you must be careful in applying it, for it will blister very quickly. Any kind of hot applications will relieve it.

H. G., Cedarville, Ga.-Consumption carries off H. G., Cedarville, Ga.—Consumption carries off more victims than any other disease in this country. Pneumonia and typhoid fever come next. Pneumonia and typhoid are liable to occur in one locality as in another, but there are sections of this country where consumption is almost unknown, except among persons who are there for relief or cure. These sections are in the dry and hot, or dry, and cold regions, East or West—dryness of the air being the great consideration, and a patient living constantly in the open air will in most instances overcome the disease.

K. Allotments have been made under agreements with the tribes. With consent of the Interior Department a portion of the allotment of a Creek patentee can be sold.

Mrs. W. H. B.—We are of the opinion that, at the bottom of the will and immediately following the testator's signature, which should be under seal, should be annexed the attestation clause in the following form: "Signed sealed, published and declared this — day of — by the above named testator, as and for his last will and testament, whereupon, we at his request, and in his presence, and in the presence of each other, have hereunto affixed our names as subscribing witnesses." R. A. The brothers and sisters of the half blood would only inherit in case he left no children, brothers or sisters of the whole blood or father or mother. In case he leaves children, his brothers and sisters of the whole blood would also be excluded.

Miss E. S.—We are of the opinion, that any local government has the legal right to pass an ordinance compelling a child to be vaccinated before it will be received into the schools. We do not think that many, if any, of the States have such a statutory requirement, but that they confer the necessary power upon the various local governments to enable them to pass and enforce an ordinance making such a requirement.

Mrs. B. W. or A. M. W.—The bankruptcy act is a Federal law and a proceeding for voluntary bankruptcy, such as yours would be, should be brought in the District Court of the United States for the district in which you reside. The act and the amendments thereto are very long and made to cover all contingencies; we in our limited space can only give you a few of the more important details most likely to apply in your case. The proceeding is commenced by the filing of a petition in triplicate and the payment to the sierk of a filing fee of thirty ($30) dollars; it is then sent to a referee in bankruptcy who sends notices to all creditors and calls a creditors' meeting. He collects from the bankrupt an indemnity fee, which varies in amount, depending upon the number of creditors, etc.; and in case of any assets, he also appoints a trustee to receive the property or pass on the exemptions. If there are no objections filed by any of the creditors, the bankrupt files a petition for final discharge and the matter goes on the notice calendar in the United States District Court; if no specifications or objections are then filed the bankrupt receives his final discharge. The act provides that one year after the final discharge can be accorded by the file of the provides that one year after the final discharge in the file of the provides that one year after the final discharge is the bankrupt may apply in any State Court in which as the responsibility for her support, or any other steps taken by him with that view in end might lead the court to allow her support from him. judgment against him has been entered, or docketed, to have the judgment cancelled off record. A good enough reason for the delay of one year for taking this action is that the law requires it, and no State Court has power to take such action until that time has expired. For us to state why Congress passed the law in that form would only be conjecture. The drawing of the petition is very technical and should be drawn by a lawyer well up on the bankruptcy law, as oftentimes creditors' claims are not barred by the discharge owing to some defect in the drawing of the petition. The form and contents of each schedule of the petition are set forth in the Act at length, and the blank form can be purchased at a stationer's carrying a full line of law blanks. The Act provides, that in case the bankrupt is unable to pay the fees, he can go through the proceeding without doing so, but this method is rarely resorted to.

Mrs. A. F. G.—If the woman you mention was to act as the selling agent for the people from whom she got the goods, and the goods were to remain their property until she sold them, upon her selling the goods and conversion; and in case they pressed the case, she could be imprisoned for her act. But if she purchased the goods from them herself and now refuses to pay for them, she could only be sued civilly for the purchase price; and upon their obtaining judgment they could issue execution and levy upon her property. Many people pursue her sactics, thinking the amount of their purchases too small for a merchant living at a distance to bother to enforce the collection of their claims, and this is too often the case; but invariably, sooner or later, they come to grief as a result of their dishonest practices.

to grief as a result of their dishonest practices.

Mrs. M. C. S.—You have only inclosed the last page of your inquiry to us so we do not know what you wish to know. We will, however, say to you in a general way, that if you are divorced from your husband you are not entitled to support from him. You are only entitled to alimony in case the decree of divorce, or some modification of it, orders him to pay you alimony; and in case it does, it must also provide for the amount and the times of payment. If you are not divorced from him or legally separated by some decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, he is bound to support you in a manner suitable to his means; and this you can compel him to do unless you have abandoned him or refuse to live in the home he provides for you.

Bells of Every Color. Bells in Profusion.

The nobbiest and daintiest decoration is the new Paperet Bell, made of yards and yards of pretty and soft paper folded ingeniously into a pretty paper Bell, and we have them in plain Red, Red, White and Blue, and Violet. The Red Bell is good at all times, the Red, White and Blue for Patriotic Holidays, and the Violet for Easter is especially attractive. We have but suggested the above, although one will think out and make use of these Bells in hundreds of pretty ways. For decorations there is nothing superior, as they are very graceful and extremely pretty suspended about a schoolroom, a church parlor, or vestry, in the home and especially pretty during the summer for outdoor trimming. It is a clever idea to have an assorted dozen in the house, then at any time you have something attractive with which to decorate a room, or rooms, upon short notice. Children derive much pleasure from these Bells and should have them for their amusement.

By importing these Bells in quantities direct we, of course, obtain them at very advantageous prices and are thus enabled to offer larger and better Bells than others who must rely on the home market, which is always sold out and no desirable goods on hand for immediate delivery. I o not make any mistake about the real beauty and decorative value of these Bells; they are extremely attractive, give every one splendid satisfaction, and are always admired wherever seen. Each Bell is eighteen inches in circumference and six inches high, as shown in our illustrations, and being nearly sun-proof, may be kept hanging for months.

Our magazines are now widely read, but we wish to secure more new subscribers in your vicinity, and are making our agents the most gratifying club offer just at this season. Read about our plan to distribute these Bells free and let us have your first order at once, we know you will require more just as soon as you see the first lot we send you.

THE regular Teddy Bear is an expensive luxury to be had by favored children of wealthy parents only, not to be bought in every store, and very high priced. This toy bear we offer is an improvement and very acceptable substitute, just as durable and just as pleasing to the little ones. Our illustration shows JUST HOW LIVELY the little JUMPING BEAR is, suspended on an elastic cord, with Jingling Bells, and he is so very good-natured tame that he can be played with in all sorts of different ways, that will be discovered by any youthful owner. GENUINE

TEDDY BEARS are now so conspiciously famous that during the last Christmas season it was impossible to meet the demand for them even at such prices as $3.00 and $5.00 each for mand for them even at such prices as $3.00 and $5.00 each for the larger ones. We know you will appreciate fully this unequaled opportunity, to procure one or more of a smaller size, free. This Bear is eight inches high, has Jointed Arms. Legs and Head, connected with Strong Wire and Nickled Rivet Heads, embroidered Claws, Mouth and Nose, a very shapely body and two Coal Black Eyes with a clean Polar White Body stuffed into proper shape and to give the greatest amount of wear for the longest time, so he is practically indestructible. There is no toy or other device so popular or pleasing, grown persons enjoy them equally as much as a juvenile, and the popular fad is widespread; they are being sold ahead for Christmas, 1907, for fear of another scarcity at that time. The funny ups and downs of this Little Bear are very amusing at any time of day, or any day in the week, month or year. We urgently recommend an early order so as to secure one or more before the market is again sold out. When the child gets tired of using "Teddy" as a jumping bear, it can be set up, or played with as a doll, or any ordinary toy. Children delight in taking these Bears to bed with them and use them in many happy ways.

March the Month for Club Working

AGENTS REAP THEIR GREATEST RESULTS THIS MONTH

March, with its winds and fury, create business and activity all about, and our best agents always report the largest business of the year at this period. COMFORT'S Club Premium Offers this month are brightened up and polished off with many new plans and presents of new selection, making the work more attractive than ever.

COMFORT retains its place as the pre-eminent popular-priced periodical, and hundreds of new agents have this season been enrolled as active workers. Many new subscribers have come into the fold, but it is in your vicinity and to you that we now address ourselves, and urgently plead that you make the small effort required to secure but one small club of yearly subscribers at the 15-cent rate, while the opportunity is yours, and the season and the club premiums offered are all so propitious.

It is a proven fact, that a person will readily subscribe to COMFORT in preference to hundreds of other similar periodicals, which are no more like COMFORT within their covers than black is like white. COM-FORT is larger and has more and better contents than its followers, the reading matter is interesting and entertaining, and there is so much of it that one has but to examine a copy to appreciate its value, and then the subscription price of FIFTEEN CENTS A YEAR is what clinches the bargain.

Twelve regular issues of this big and bright magazine sent to any address for but 15 cents, and to repay you for whatever time or interest you will give to showing it up, we reward you liberally.

There are many people who have already been subscribers to COMFORT for the past year, but they forgot, however, to sit down and write us a letter and inclose the money to renew their subscription for an other year, and while they really want the paper they do not have the opportunity to re-subscribe direct. This is where your opportunity comes in. They will all thank you to act as their agent, as well as ours, and send in their subscription along with others. You will get well paid for your trouble in the premium you earn, and they won't have any more trouble in the matter at all and will also bless you for helping them out in having COMFORT for another year at the low price of 15 cents.

In this issue of COMFORT we have taken space to print a few new and some old reliable Club Offers These articles we illustrate and describe, so that you may get a better idea of the goods and a description of their quality or attractiveness.

Each and every premium article we advertise is of extra good quality, and to every agent who works for COMFORT we promise a "SQUARE DEAL."

Although we now have a large subscription list we want you to derive some return for your sp.

ments now wasted. Instead of whiling away many precious moments, devote them to a little subscription work right around your own home and among those you are acquainted with. Results will surprise you, and the many pretty attractive and useful articles so easily procured for the new subscribers you can secure, will be a source of gratification to you, and in order that you may know of the complete variety of premium articles we give away, we ask the privilege of mailing to you a free copy of our catalogue, a copy of which will be sent upon receipt of a postal request.

Do not take our word for the whole matter, try the work just once, for a few moments each day for a week and learn for yourself the pleasure of self help and personal endeavor, which we will crown with the present you select, and you will not fail to find in our catalogue more than one article that you have often wanted, and never possessed.

Let nothing prevent you from giving this a trial. If you secure but three or even five snbscribers we have a present for you just the same, and the effort will be appreciated by us just as much as if you sent a club of one or two hundred. "It's the few that make the many." Give us a lift, and we will give you a boost in return. Below we print a convenient subscription blank coupon, for those who desire to now subscribe, and particularly those who last month did not have time to send us their renewal order with 15 cents.

Should you use this coupon for a renewal kindly indicate it by writing Ren. on the same. It will

And Wonderful Work, WOOD'S NATURAL HISTORY—the Standard Work for All Homes.

It is impossible to give in this announcement more than a slight idea of the magnitude of this great History, with its myriad pictures and accurate descriptions. It virtually goes into the haunts of all animals and shows them as they live.

Wood's Natural History is the recognized authority all over the world for accurate information regarding the habits, haunts, peculiarities and diseases of the Animal Kingdom. The work is a veritable treasure-house of valuable information, interestingly told, and replete with hundreds of accurate and artistic illustrations. This mammoth Cyclopædia of the Animal World consists of over eight hundred pages and is substantially bound in stiff paper covers. Size of open book, 8x11 inches, and nearly 2 inches thick. It is in clear print on good paper, with five hundred illustrations by special artists. The countless anecdotes which it contains will make merry many a long winter evening, and the hundreds of pages of thrilling adventures which those daring people, who traverse mountain and morass, lungle and desert, to learn the habits of the animal kingdom undergo, will furnish true, heartfelt enjoyment to every member of the family—young and old. As the book contains full descriptions of all domestic animals, also, with treatment and cures for their diseases, no farmer should be without it, and as the list embraces everything, from the gnat to the giraffe, the bat to the bear, the mouse to the mastodon, the coyote to the cuscus, no boy, no-hunter, no student—in fact, nobody should neglect this grandest of all offers. So thrilling and exciting are many of these adventures as to equal the wildest tales of the tropics, or the most blood-curding ghost story; and yet they are all true, being the transcripts of personal experiences of noted travelers. Not only are they of sufficient importance to amuse and instruct the young, but they will absorb the attention and pass away many a dull hour for the old and world

WHAT VITAE-ORE

Vitæ-Ore is a mineral remedy, a combination of substances from which many world's noted curative springs derive medicinal power and healing virtue. These properties of the springs come from the natural deposits of mineral in the earth through which water forces its way, only a very small proportion of the medicinal substances in these mineral deposits being thus taken up by the liquid. Vitæ-Ore consists of compounds of Iron, Sulphur and Magnestum, elements which are among the chief curative agents in nearly every healing mineral spring, and are necessary for the creation and retention of health. One package of this mineral substance, mixed with a quart of water, equals in medicinal strength and curative, healing value, many gallons of the world's powerful mineral waters, drunk fresh at the springs.

In all parts of the United States and Canada have testified to the efficacy of Vitae-Ore in relieving and curing such diseases as Rheumatism, Kidney, Bladder and Liver Diseases, Dropsy, Stomach Disorders, Female Ailments, Functional Heart Trouble, Catarrh of any part, Nervous Prostration, Anaemia, Sores and Ulcers, and worn out, debilitated conditions.

MOTHER FATHER, AND SON

All Permanently Cured of Serious Ailments

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Vitæ-Ore has done so much for myself and family.

My husband has been afflicted with Catarrh for years and in 1900 it settled in his Stomach and nothing would help him. His Stomach would hardly stand anything, it caused coughing spells, at which and his death was expected at almost any hour. It was then my sister visited me. She had used V.-O, with good results and had some with her, which she gave him to try. My husband got better almost from the first dose, and was ont of danger in a short time. We sent for more Vitæ-Ore and he kept on taking it until he got completely well, and he has remained so ever since, although now sixty-seven years of age.

About that time my son took very sick and the doctors pronounced it Quick Consumption and said he could not get well. We gave him Vitæ-Ore and he grew well and hearty. He was then twenty-six years of age and is now past thirty-two, is married and has two beautiful and healthy children.

I, personally, suffered for many years with Pemale Trouble until doctors told me that I had to have an operation as the only thing that could give me relief, and I consented.

This was over ten years ago and it left me very weak and but very little benefited. It was the Vitæ-Ore which has given me strength and new blood so that I have since been able to attend to my housework. I will be sixty-six years old in May, but don't feel that old; I go about my work and duties now much better than I did twenty years ago. All of this we ove to Vitæ-Ore.

Mrs. Emma Sachs, 922 So. Illinois St.

Comfort Readers!

Get out your pen and ink and write us:

"I am sick. I need Vitæ-Ore or something that will cure me. I have seen your trial offer. Send me a dollar package. I will use it and pay the dollar if I find it has helped me. I will not pay one penny if it does not help

That is all it takes. Just a letter asking for it. We and Vitæ-Ore do the rest. Don't delay! Do it now!

Help Nature with the Right Remedy

An aid to nature (and at all times, so matter what means are used, we are only assisting nature), Vitæ-Ore is indeed an ideal creation. It contains elements which, when the body is in ill health, are needed by nature for her work of recuperation, and in supplying such materials, it supplies health to the body, health in blood, brain and nerve tissue; health in those organs upon which health in the entire body is dependent. When there is an abnormal symptom, no matter in whatforgan, Vitæ-Ore assists nature to remove the abnormality and thus establish! the cure. It is not a cure-all, though its efficacy covers a wide range of silments and disorders, but is a vitalizing, tonic, healing, corrective and strengthening force that arouses nature to correct action in vital functions. It cures many disorders and has the same beneficial action in diseases which seem diametrically opposite, all in the same natural way, all by assisting nature to properly perform the functions which always are properly performed in good health, and thus establishes good health. None deny that many ills and diseases, classified by physicians under various names, may be traced to one disturbing influence, one underlying lesion, and it is by the removal of these controlling causes that Vitæ-Ore cures so many seemingly diversified conditions. It cures the cause more than the disease, the origin more than the symptom, a manner of cure that needs no comment. It assists in re-establishing order, the lack of which is responsible for ill-health in any portion of the body, and when this is encompassed, disease vanishes. It is a rational method, the getting down to the very root of the troubles, which should and does appeal to all rational people.

If You Don't Feel Right

A MEXICAN WAR HERO TESTIFIES TO ITS POWERS

Read this Affidavit from One of the Few Survivors of this Conflict. Vitæ-Ore Prolonged His Life.

I, W. F. Clendening, of the County of Sumner, and State of Tennessee, do hereby testify under oath that I have been suffering from Kidney Trouble for more than three years. I had to get up eight and nine times night to urinate. I also had a ringing in my ears had a ringing in my ears and that has left me. I could not sleep and now I sleep like a babe. I am 81 years old and the Vitæ-Ore has done me more good than any other medicine and I owe all my present health to it. I went through the Mexican war in 1847 and 1848. I think Vitæ-Ore will prolong any man's life.

W & Clendenny

STATE OF TENNESSEE | SS.

I, John M. Guthrie, acting Justice of the Peace for Sumner County, State of Tennessee, do hereby certify that W. F. Clendening appeared before me in person and made oath as to the truth and correctness of the above statement and signed and sealed same in my presence. Given under my hand and seal this 6th day of November, 1906.

Feels Like a New Being

Rev. J. H. Maice, the Blind Evangelist, Tells of His Complete Cure from Compil-cation of Troubles.

Rev. J. H. Maice, Author and Preacher, familiarly known all over central Pennsylvania as "The Blind Evangelist," a term by which he is held in sweet reverence by the thousands who have come under the magic of his eloquent voice and the charm of his gentle personality, knows the powers of Vitæ-Ore, having been restored by it to health and a life of usefulness and activity.

On the lath of July, America's natal day, in the year 1893, he saw his wife and children, the fields and the sky, for the last time in the clear shapes in which God had made them, and gradually the light was blotted out until a total darkness hung over his life. That was not all, as a Rheumatic sickness came to add to his trial, and for many days he suffered all the tortures which the human frame is capable of enduring. At last Vitæ-Ore came to his aid, and drove out the humors which had so long distressed him. Read what he says:

CARLISLE, PENN.—For many long years I had been suffering from Sciatica and Muscular Rheumatism; at times I thought that it must kill me. No one can imagine what I endured from this dread disease. I had spent a great deal of money for doctors and all sorts of remedles, but found nothing to cure me. I was also troubled with Piles, a palpitating and weak Heart, my Kidneys were disordered, my Liver in bad shape, and altogether I had a goodly share of the trials which fall to the lot of man.

On the 24th day of November, 1903, I began to use Vitæ-Ore. The results were astonishing. I had not finished the third package before my Piles had entirely disappeared and my Rheumatism, which had so long remained unvanquished, was much improved. I continued using it until I had taken in all eight package. I can safely say that I am entirely cured of all my discases, aches and pains, and feel like a new being.

I also know many others who have been cured of many different diseases through the use of Vitæ-Ore. A prominent minister at this place was suffering from Vertigo and Stomach Trouble and began using it upon my recommendation.

All Pronounced Her Incurable.

THOMPSONVILLE, MICH.—I have spent hundreds of dollars, employing the best physicians in the State and some from Chicago. I have been examined with the X-Ray and all pronounced my case incurable. Few seemed to know what my trouble was. Three packages of Vitee-Ore have made a wonderful change in my condition. I can work all day and am free from pain, something I have not been free from for ten years.

MAY CONKEY.

Salt Rheum and Piles Cured.

DUNDEE, ILL.—For nearly nine years I have been afflicted with Salt Rheum on both of my limbs. I used nearly all the patent medicines and salves that were advertised to cure this trouble and spent several ten-dollar bills but to no avail. I was also afflicted with the Piles. After using four packages of Vitæ-Ore I can cheerfully say that I am cured and have not felt better for the last seven years. I am over sixty years old and can work like a man twenty years my junior.

Chas. Doss.

A TRIAL OF VITÆ-ORE Will tell you its own plain story, a story that has meant comfort, peace, and happiness to thousands of men and women.

AS A BEACON LIGHT Vitæ-Ore points the way for storm-tossed sufferers to a Haven of Health and Comfort. If you have been drifting in a sea of sickness and disease, towards the rocks and shoals of Chronic Invalidism, Port your helm before it is too late; take heed to the message of Hope and Safety it flashes to you, stop drifting about in a helpless, under the goal you are seeking by the route so many have traveled with success. Every person who has let it guide them home to health is willing to act as a pilot for you: each knows the way from having followed it; attend their advice and follow the light. Thousands have followed it to guide them in the past, thousands are depending upon it satisfied with the methods employed by his congregation to obtain money for his salary, decided to go into the mills and work as a laborer. It appears that the members of his congregation had been trying to raise funds for his salary by getting up suppers, and other similar schemes. We think the minister took a manly and sensible course in this matter. It is a protest against a form of raising money for church purposes which we hardly think commendable. When a minister of God has to be supported by ice-cream scrambles, pink-tea socials, and strawberry festivals, his self-respect must suffer, and his holy office and ministry lose caste with the world at large. Sincere Christians should have too much respect for their religion and church to let their pastor's salary go unpaid, have too much respect for their religion and church to let their pastor's salary go unpaid, as is often the case. People who will squander two dollars on a theater ticket will break their hearts if they have to drop a dime when the plate is passed on Sunday. People should set aside a certain sum for the support of their church just as they set aside a certain sum for the rent of their house, but unfortunately money for church support is thought of last of all, and as a result there is no money left for this the most vitally necessary of all things. Hence all sorts of schemes have to be put into execution to raise funds for the minister's execution to raise funds for the minister's Usually lack of church funds is caused by Usually lack of church funds is caused by thoughtiessness, and by neglect on the part of church congregations to realize their duty to their minister and their Creator, in the matter of providing means for churchwork and support. Remember the root of the whole trouble lies in this: The men do not go to church as they should, and church support is left almost entirely to women and women in the majority of cases have to depend on their husbands for of cases have to depend on their husbands for their funds, and after house expenses have been provided for and the children clothed, there is little money left for churchwork, and women are forced, if they are to have any church or minister at all, to resort to all sorts of schemes minister at all, to resort to all sorts of schemes and methods to get money from the public. No church can do good work, unless it is on a sound financial basis, and no minister can put his heart into his work when his salary is behind, and he is unable to meet his bills. We advise all of our readers who are church members to take this little talk to heart, and do their part for the honor and glory of God, and his church on earth.

A movement has at last been started by the Society of Social Service to stop the terrible waste of life, which daily takes place in every field of industrial work in this country. There has been an exposition held recently in New York, at which all manner of devices for safeguarding human life, and protecting the toiler at his work were on exhibition. In Europe the governments took up this matter, and every possible precaution is taken, and every known device is used to protect human life in mine, factory and workshop. Human life here, unfortunately is held cheap. It has become a byword in this country that it is cheaper to kill men than to protect them, and so the fearful slaughter goes on unchecked.

Dr. Josiah Strong, who has ever been a power in all movements for public betterment makes this terrifying statement: "On the basis of the annual mortality rate reported by the government in 1900, there will be 575,000 killed every ten years, besides some 5,000,000 injured. This is like massacring every inhabitant in three cities of the size of Indianapolis, Kansas City, and Denver every ten years, or mangling and maining every man, woman and child in the states of Washington, Oregon, California, Nebraska, Nevada, Utah, New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho, Montana, and Oklahoma, and doing it every ten years. There are 575,000 people in the United States (you and I may be among them), under sentence of death, 100 to be executed at an unknown moment during the next ten years, 100 next week, and 1,100 more the week following, until the ghastly work is completed. An intelligent and earnest effort would secure the reprieve of a multitude of these innocent victims, it is dollars or woes," thus says Dr. Josiah Strong, we quote him word for word and augusty when be put the heart ten years and and hear heart the word for word and augusty when he mutt the Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the joing.

In Texas and the Southwest, the farmers are strongly organized, the Lone Star State having 160,000 organized farmers, who have their own warehouses, where they store their products, until they can get profitable prices for them. Labor Unions and farmers in Texas, work harmoniously together, and maintain a joint lobby during the session of the legislature at Austin. Their interests appear to be ideutical and they are able to enforce legislation mutually advantageous. The Society of identical and they are able to enforce legislation mutually advantageous. The Society of Equity and the farmers of the Southwest are discussing plans for amalgamation. If this amalgamation takes place, an effort will be made to abolish the commission merchant and Board of Trade speculator, and sell farm products direct to the consuming public. We have only to look at the price of fruit and farm products in cities to see how vastly the farmer would gain could he dispense with the middleman. Farmers are the chief consumers of the products of Union Labor, and there should be a strong fraternal bond between them. The American Federation of Labor has also gone into politics, and the Organized Farmers may also join them in the political field. There are eight million farmers in this country, and about three millions of organized workers, while the total vote in the United States is under fifteen millions. We may thus see that the farmers and the wage earners between them would control the political situation in this country. Most farmers are conservative in the farmers and the wage earners between them would control the political situation in this country. Most farmers are conservative in their views, most laborers radical and progressive. Will it be possible for the farmer and the wage earner to pool their interests, and evolve a political platform that will satisfy the views of both? If this is possible, a great change is liable to take place in American political life. The future alone can tell what will happen. Anything that can add to the matelitical life. The future alone can tell what will happen. Anything that can add to the material welfare of the workers and the farmers, will be a matter of deep interest to COMFORT. We want all the readers of COMFORT to have comfort, and comfort cannot be obtained, unless the interests of our readers and their welfares are safeguarded, and advanced in every possible way. This can only be done by organization and the dissemination of progressive ideas. We heartly wish success to any movement that will benefit the farmers and wage earners of this country. They are the backbone of this nation, as they are of every other. All society is based on these two elements. The nation can prosper only as they prosper, just as a plant can be only healthy as prosper, just as a plant can be only healthy as long as its roots are in good condition. God speed their efforts for betterment.

Havana Cigars

"Everybody in this country who smokes, and most everybody does," said the tobacco drummer from Louisville, "would like to smoke Havana cigars, and there are a great many cigars sold here for Havanas, which are something else. I know this, because there were only 79,483,125 Havana cigars shipped to this country last year, while our total consumption of all kinds is about eight billions annually. Estimating that there are thirty million of smokers here, we get only enough Havanas to give less than three a year to each smoker. There are some who think most of the Cuban cigars smokers here, we get only enough havanas to give less than three a year to each smoker. There are some who think most of the Cuban cigars come to the United States, but the figures show we get only about thirty per cent., the total shipments being 256,738,029 cigars. England buys a third more than we do, and Germany about one third as many, while France gets only about 12,000,000. Seventy-five different countries clean around the globe get part of the Havana supply. One reason we use less than England is that we ship the tobacco leaf here and make it into cigars, our shipments being 25,000,000 pounds to England's 25,000. We take about eleven twelfths of all Cuban leaf shipped. Havana cigars are supposed to be the best, and they are to those who like them, but be sure you are getting what you ask for when the man hands you out Havanas, for your share can only be three a year."

High-priced Singers

"When a man working day and night, regardless of the eight-hour law, or any other restraint of labor," said the drummer for a Chicago firm, "gets $2,500 a year for his services, with something on the side for expenses, he thinks he is doing pretty well, and he talks on for year after year at the same rate. But think of those people who use their voices for singing purposes and what they get. There is that Caruso, tenor, who has been getting $1,600 a time for every time he sang, striking for $3,000 a time, and making a contract finally at $2,300 a sing, for a whole season. And there was Jean de Reszke getting $2,500 each for thirty concerts; Tamagno pulling $1,600 a song, and Campanini making $8,000 a month. Patti used to get $5,000 a night, while Sembrich, a little bit of a woman, earns $1,750 a night, and got $125,000 on her voice when she paid her first visit to this country twenty-five years ago. Figures like those make me feel like singing some other song than shoes, but I suppose if I tried it, I wouldn't get anything but a bad egg from the audience."

The Telephone Growth

The Telephone Growth

"Most of us past thirty years of age, which is considered rather young," said a man who was probably a year or so older, "can remember when there wasn't such a thing known in the world as a telephone. Now the person who hasn't talked over the 'phone is a rarity and would like as not blow out the gas before he went to bed. They are everywhere almost, and many sections which do not yet know the railroad and the telegraph have their telephone service. In numbers there were in the United States last year over five billion talks over the 'phone and about 134 million long distance talks. There are overseven million instruments in use, a million and a half miles of toll wire, 2,385,000 miles of underground wire, 11,373 miles of submarine wire, in all about six million miles of telephone wire for all uses. There are 2,715,367 stations, 8,407,900 circuits and 90,000 persons employed. All this growth within the memory of our young people. Which reminds me that I knew a man to whom Alexander Bell, inventor of the Bell telephone, now worth hundreds of millions, offered a half interest in the whole business for $1,800, and the man refused it because he didn't see anything in the telephone." see anything in the telephone."

Girls' Trade School

"The Manhattan Trade School for Girls, has just moved into its new $200,000 building in New York," remarked the hardware drummer, "and it is doing a good work. But only in four trades, as the only ones the school authorities think justify the teaching. They are hand-sewing, millinery, pasting, or novelty work, and electric machine operating. The girls are taught for a year or more and when they go out to work at wages, they soon get the highest, making as much as $15 to $13 a week on piecework. The hours of the school are the same as in shops. The education of the girls is also looked after in other branches, but they are secondary. Employers are always they are secondary. Employers are always anxious to get the girls from the school and they never have to look long for positions. Continue down opposite side of point in the same way. 2 d. c. on next, 2 d. c. on center ring. Repeat seven times. This completes one rosette or Marguerite of which twenty-one are required.

The second row of flowers are made in the same way, leaving off three points. After the fifth point sl. st. to center of ring make 24 ch., turn. 10 d. c. on ch. 10, make two points as in first Marguerites and continue with d. c. to end of ch., sl. st. along ring to base of first point and fasten off thread. Make 9 of these.

The small figures are composed of center ring and five points and are five in number.

The little rolls or knots in the center of the flowers are made by threading a needle with the working thread, and taking a stitch in the center ring, bring the needle half way through again, take up the thread where it comes through the ring and wind it thirty times around needle. Hold between thumb and finger and draw thread through coils, put needle back through saine place, and fasten on wrong side. These are same as French knots.

Foundation for Neck

Foundation for Neck

Make chain twelve inches in length, turn, one double in each chain.

When figures are all made lay a collar pattern nine inches deep and with a width of forty-two inches around edge, on a piece of dark cambric and mark around plainly. Do not cut away cambric. Baste the twenty-one Marguerites around outer edge of pattern. Baste carefully and arrange so that the points lie directly each way. Baste the nine half flowers just above at equal distances, turning stems all one way, or to suit fancy. Arrange upper row of small flowers, one in center and two at equal distances on either side. Baste neck foundation to place and all is ready for joining.

Take a piece of linen, eleven by eleven inches, fold lengthwise and crosswise, then from the center of each side, measure in one inch and cut out in a curve to each corner. Now take a large piece of paper, lay the cloth and mark all around it, remove the cloth, baste Battenberg braid evenly on the paper inside of the marks. Then commence at the corner and baste the braid in a half circle to the center of the first row of braid, then from the center in another half circle to the next corner.

Treat each side the same, then commence at center of one of the half circles and baste the braid about three inches out to a point then back to the center of the other half circle, now take a ruler, mark in straight lines as close as you desire, both ways between the braid. Stitch along both edges of the braid, then sew along the ruled lines one way and then the other. There is not any need of breaking the thread at the end of each line. When the machine work is done, baste the linen on the paper where the first row of braid is basted on the outline of the linen and stitch all around on the extreme edge. Mail all letters at least THREE MONTHS before the issue for which they are intended.

Always give your correct name and address, as no letter will be published excepting over it. This enables the sisters to write directly to each other.

Do not write us for samples or patterns of the fancy work which have appeared. When publishing any particular piece of work, we give the plainest possible directions for making and usually illustrate it. It is absolutely useless for you to write for more information, or for samples, or patterns of anything unless stated that they can be supplied.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:

In renewing my subscription to Comfort, having taken it for one year, I will try and add a few helps. If those living in old houses will try pasting the margin cut from newspapers over cracks at side, top and bottom of windows, it will keep their plants from freezing. I lived for fifteen years in a very old house, it was the coldest house I ever saw, yet I could leave my plants on windows by doing this, and slipping papers between the plants and glass. Now I have a warmer home, and just go out and put a paper next the glass, shut the blinds, and you will find even if the window was coated with frost, after closing the blind it will melt off.

My hands chap and crack badly in the winter. I have just found that collodion applied to cracks will take out the soreness and heat them in a very few hours. It is not expensive, ten cents for a small bottle, and it lasts for a long time. It does smart badly when first applied, but that is the least of the hurt. It is excellent for all cuts, scratches, burns, etc.

of the hurt. It is excellent for all cuts, scratches, burns, etc.

If you will put your white clothes to soak in cold water for one half hour, and then wring out very dry, and put into a boiler of water in which soap is dissolved, and boil for twenty or thirty minutes, suds and then rinse in bluing water, you will find them very white and clean with no rubbing. Of course men's dirty work clothes or children's that were creeping would need some rubbing, but as I have only boys that are in offices, and no farm work, find it a great help from rubbing as I used to.

work, find it a great help from rubbing as I used to.

I wish all of those I have sent postal cards would return favor as they agreed to. Many are due me. I suppose you have all been busy with Christmas and one thing and another, and have forgotten postal cards and me. I would be pleased to have them now.

I was calling a short time ago where the lady had been away from home all day, and as she went to light her sitting-room lamp, found she must wash it; she did, and brought it back all dripping, lit the lamp, gave the chimney a shake and put it on, and it did not crack either. This is the way she did. Wash it in warm (not hot) suds, then rinse in cool (not cold) water, and she said they never would crack if you would gradually turn up the light. I have tried it, and never have broken one yet.

Night. I have tried it, and never have broken one yet.

If there are any thinking of raising canaries this spring and would care to know how I raised them successfully for seven years, will write my experience to Comfort. I very seldom lost one, and one year raised over one hundred.

I agree with Lillian Rutledge about paying postage both ways. I don't think it fair to ask favors and then ask them to pay postage beside. I, for one, never send to those. One very often has things that they have no use for, and are glad to get out of the way. I know I do, but when it comes to paying postage on dry goods, or even to get a return letter from a stranger, it is too much. Of course I except shut-ins and invalids. I always inclose postage in writing to a person for information, then I am most always sure of an answer. I will send some recipes sometime, which I think are excellent.

Mrs. Ella N. Rockwell, Box 43, East Windsor Hill, Conn.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS: If you sisters from the North could be with me today (Jan. 14th), I could show you my garden carpeted with plants of phlox, China pinks, and holly-hocks, and other bloomers. In the yard I found a baby snowdrop just peeping out of the covering I had placed over it, thinking it would sleep for another mouth at least. My roses are beginning to leaf, and I am really afraid that when it turns cold, which it is likely to do any day, they will all get killed. However, I shall wrap them up well when it does turn cold, and when any of the sisters visit me next summer, I hope to be able to give them a nice bouquet. I have sixteen different colors of roses most of them are small. I bought them last year.

Have any of you ever tried planting castor beans to rid your place of moles? The moles were very bad in our garden, and we were told that the castor beans would ruin them. We did not believe they would, but planted a few, and there have never been any moles here since. The beans still come up voluntarily, and we always leave a few standing.

To the girl who says she is not in a hurry to marry, I would say: Keep to that resolution, and when you do marry you will be all the happier for it. If your marriage is a happy one you will know that you did not need to be in a hurry, and if a failure you need never reproach yourself with having rushed to your doom. If girls would be a little slower in trying to marry, there would not be so many failures. My husband and I were talking one day of the foolishness of some girls in rushing around trying to find a husband, and, just for fun I told him the men were as bad. He said they were not, and we argued half an hour, each one citing instances to prove ourselves right. At last I told him I could prove beyond a doubt, that the men were as crayy to marry as the girls. "Well," said he, "prove it." "Every time a girl marries so does a maray said I. But really, girls. I am afraid our sex rould prove beyond a doubt, that the men were as crazy to marry as the girls. "Well," said he, "prove it." "Every time a girl marries so does a man," said I. But really, girls, I am afraid our sex are siller than the men on the marriage question.

To PREVENT. Use unremitting care, that nothing attractive to the "blue bottle" is left lying around from his first appearance in the spring until freezing weather; August, September and October are the months in which the greatest care is necessary. A dead hog left in a field, unburied, may cause the loss of a flock of turkeys, as has been my experience. In poultry raising, as in all industries, there is profit and loss. To succeed, requires energy, perseverance, patience and knowledge, an iota of which I have endeavored to impart for the good of all.

Dear Sisters:

In helping others you help yourself the most sometimes. Do you ever think of that? I subscribed for Comfort just to help a little girl, and now I have paid three years in advance because I like it so well.

I am interested in the fancy work and think that Comfort is very helpful.

Whenever I receive bundles from the store, I always fold the paper into a small package and wind the string tightly around and tie it and put it into a box that I keep on purpose. Paper bags I serve the same way, then I do not stop to hunt for a paper and twine when I need them.

I think that it is a good rule to write to one or more of the shut-ins every month and send them something if possible. I have never been very thoughtful before, but if you could see my January number you would find a number of crosses in the Comfort Sisters' Corner that I have written to or am going to write to. This is one of my new leaves that I have turned for 1907, "Helping Others" is written at the top.

Dear Comfort Sisters:

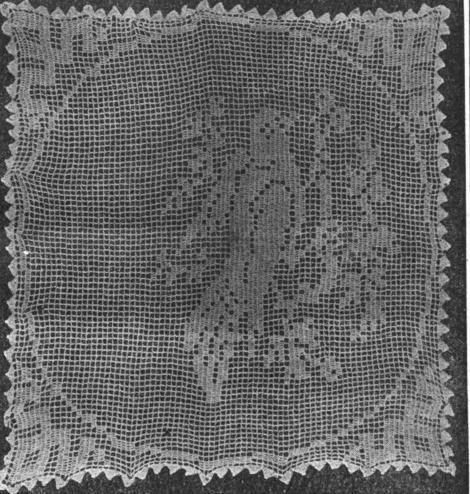

I have never seen a letter from this place. My home is in Kansas City, Missouri, which as you may know, is one of the growing cities along the Missouri river. We are very proud of our improvements here—especially our parks and boulevard system, which encircles the city, Swope Park being, I believe, the third largest in the world. We are also proud of our rank as a manufacturing and railroad center.

We have many large buildings, among them being Convention Hall, which is noted for its seating capacity and its excellent accoustic properties.

I wish some of the sisters would come and see me. I would try hard to have them enjoy the visit. My husband and I have our own home, and are very happy. We have been married five years, and have a dear little boy of two.

How glad I am that we are given the opportunity, as we are, of helping the dear shut-ins, and that they can appeal to our little corner, knowing it is not in vain. I am going to try this year and see how many I can help each month—if only in a small way.

Now, sisters dear, don't you think it would be

I am twenty-eight years old, five feet three inches tall, and weigh one hundred and ten pounds, thick light brown hair, and what color shall I call my eyes? Well they are a dark green, that is the real color of them, but sometimes they look blue and sometimes gray. Will someone tell me what color they would be called?

I am a lover of nature; am fond of music, flowers, and fancy work.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON:
I notice very many of the readers confess that your "Corner" is so interesting that they are very anxious to be numbered among your guests and like the "Schoolmaster's Guests" in Carlton's Farm Legends,—"Them ere is my sentiments, tew."
I always feel like I had gotten hold of an old friend that I am real glad to see whenever "Comfort" comes, and I always "devour" the cozy corner first of all. I have lived in Indiana for the past few years, but am not a native "Hoosier," as I was born in Illinois. My parents have a pleasant country home of one hundred and sixty acres located about one third mile west of the city limits of Crawfordsville, a place of 12,000 population; it is a nice cleanly kept place and is noted for its many shade trees. There are three railroads and one intersuburban ine passing through and another intersuburban is rapidly nearing completion.

There are several good schools, and Wabash College is located here. We live near enough to the college grounds, that we can hear the cheering and noise whenever a game of ball is being played. Crawfordsville was the home of the late Gen. Lew Wallace, the author of the famous books.

adopt something like that, if our dear editor were willing?

I am going to send in one or two recipes this time. I hope all will try them.

How many of you are familiar with the common burdock, which grows as a weed? Do you know if the stems are bruised, and laid in water to cover them, it is good for many things? It makes a fine spring medicine; a few swallows after meals. Used as a poultice it is good for sores, bruises and skin diseases of many kinds, as well as fever. My mother has used this in our family for many years. Do you know that a tablespoonful of flour sifted in corn meal mush will help keep it from sticking?

That if a mould is brushed inside with the white of an egg, the jelly will turn out nicely?

That many people like baked potatoes better if boiled a few moments before putting in the oven?

That biscuit dough is good rolled in a sheet with sliced apples covered over the top, and sprinkled with sugar, cinnamon and small bits of butter?

Try this, also the dough made into oblong rolls, sprinkle with sugar for a change. Pile them crisscoss fashion on a dainty plate and they are tempting. Will some of you write to me?

Are you reading the serial, "The Shadow of a Cross?" It is a strong story and will appear serially in COMFORT for some months. Only 15 cents for a full year's subscription, if sent at once.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND COMFORT SISTERS:
I wrote a letter some time ago inquiring for a remedy for birds' sore feet. The letter appeared in the December number of COMFORT, and since then I have received many letters from COMFORT readers giving remedies. I hope that all who have written me will find this letter in which I thank them all for their great kindness in sending their remedies. I was glad that so many were interested in birds. Our bird is well now and this is what cured him:

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:
I live in the state of Montana; it is a cold country. We have about nine months of cold weather with plenty of wind and snow, and three months of real delightful weather, but we can see the snow on the mountain tops all the time, excepting may be during July. In the summer the valleys are strewn with beautiful wild flowers and tall blue grass. The principal crops are wheat, oats, barley, and potatoes.

My relatives are all in Tennessee, and how I long to see them, my poor father is a shut-in, so you know I can sympathize with all the dear shut-ins of Comport's family, but we hope we are going back to our native land some day.

The climate has benefited us greatly, we are now fat and robust. I am five feet five inches tall, and weigh one hundred and thirty pounds. We have been married three years, and have two of the dearest children, both boys, one two years and a baby three months, they are sweet and pretty; we are very proud of them.

MRS. RILLA VICKERS, Utica, Mont.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I am a reader of your helpful letters and get much benefit from them.

I have been married six years. I have brown hair, blue eyes, and weigh one hundred and fifty pounds. My home is in the eastern part of Texas; our nearest railroad is twenty miles away, still we are not heathens as some people might think.

There is a fine lot of pine timber in this country, but it is being worked up fast now. Some of the timber is floated down the Sabine river to Orange. We raise corn and cotton here principally, but the Mexican boll weevil has ruined the cotton crop here the last two years.

How many of the sisters love flowers? I imagine all of you do, for I can't see how anyone could help loving them, they are so sweet. I am a real flower lover. I have several kinds of geraniums, three kinds of begonias besides many flowers such as roses and some hardy flowers; if any of the sisters not too far away have any geranium cuttings to spare, I would like to exchange some with them.

I love fancy work also, have done some the past year. I have considerable nice tissue paper. I would be glad if any of the sisters could tell me some nice way of using it, making paper flowers or anything ornamental.

Can anyone tell me where I can get caraway seeds for flavoring cookies, I've never seen any, but would like to get some.

I want to send a tested recipe for angel cake.

I would like for some of the sisters to write to me as we could exchange ideas on fancy work and flowers. I would especially like a correspondent from Florida and California.

MRS. MARY Low, Sabinetown, Texas.

If it is 223 or less, it means that your subscription has or is about expired and you should renew at once so as to not miss any papers containing the great story, "St. Elmo," which will be continued for some months during 1907; it only costs 15 cents to do it now.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I enjoy reading your letters very much, and wish they came every week. We have taken up a homestead here in the foothills, and I often get lonely. This was once mining land. There are several little mines around now, but they don't amount to much. It is very pretty in the hills, especially after a while when they are covered with wild flowers.

after a while when they are covered with wild flowers.

How my heart aches for all the poor shut-ins, and how powerless I feel to help them. But I pray for them every day—I believe.

Now, sisters, don't ask me for silk pieces, for they don't grow on these hills, and I wouldn't write about coming to California, unless you have a very good reason for coming. You had better stay where you are than waste money coming out here. I mean poor people, of course. You can't live on climate, and most everything else you will find dearer, I believe. I would like letters from lonely ones, friendless or discouraged ones, or good letters from anyone. If I haven't answered anyone's letter it was because they asked questions or for things I did not have time to discuss. I have one son fifteen, and two little girls I have taken, twelve and four years old. I adopted the one four years old since I lost my own darling. She is a great comfort to me.

Anna Likes. I know how you miss your mother. I lost mine eight years ago this winter, and it leaves a void that nothing can fill. I hope your boy will return to you all safe and sound. If you can, write to me. I have so little time and postage to spare I can't write many letters, but I would like to comfort or help someone more lonely than myself.

DEAR SISTERS:

We are just nicely settled on a North Dakota homestead, with no near neighbors but a few bachelors holding down their claims, and twenty-five miles from the nearest town. To us who have lived all our lives within half a mile of town, if not right in town, this is an immense change. In the East I used to read magazine articles on the homesteaders and their sod shanties, but I never expected to see, much less to live in one.

One of the first things I did upon arriving here was to order Comport sent to me, and I intend to take solid comfort in its Sisters' Corner and its fancy work pages, for I enjoy both of them greatly. I hardly expect to see a woman's face this winter. Fortunately, we have a post-office within two miles of us or we would be almost entirely isolated.

On the expiration of our fourteen months' stay I will write and tell the sisters our experiences if I think them worth recording. DEAR SISTERS: We are just

I will write and tell the sisters our experiences if I think them worth recording.

If any of the sisters who have reading matter to spare, will send me some, also those having scraps, odds and ends of everything that can be put into any kind of piece or fancy work, and not having any use for it themselves, will forward some to me it will be greatly appreciated, as it will keep me busy, and help to keep off the blues.

DEAR COMPORT SISTERS:

I wonder if all the sisters I sent samples of shadow embroidery to are busy at that work. I have a few suggestions to make. I want to tell you that sofa pillows made in the shadow embroidery and worked in colors are perfect dreams. If a wild rose pillow, work the roses with pink silk, and the leaves green, they are very dainty. I worked one in butterflies all different sizes and colors, and it was beautiful.

If the sisters will take the baby pillows I have sent them, and lay them on Persian lawn and trace them off, and work the roses pink, and the leaves green, the scroll a delicate blue, and the word baby either blue or pink, you will have the most beautiful baby pillow you ever saw.

The tall athletic figure of a young man is seen leaning against the trunk of a tree. Half aloud he soliloquizes, and wonders what is keeping them. He asks himself why a woman of Mrs. Rosslyn's Puritanic strength of character should embrace the Catholic faith. "Is it for this I am to be separated from the object of my dearest desire?" The sound of many voices chanting the Ave Maria is borne to his waiting ears. The service ends, and Theta Rosslyn meets her lover, Gene Warfield. There is an opening for him in the West in Judge Blodgett's office. He will win wealth and fame, and coming back make Theta his wife. As he pleads he sees a small chain about Theta's neck, and asks what talisman is hiding there. Pulling at the chain he finds a tiny gold crucifix; he snaps the chain and dashes the crucifix to the ground. With a cry like a wounded animal, she catches the crucifix to the breast. "God forgive me, if even for a little while I let your love words deceive me into forgetting the depth of the gulf which lies between us." Gene pleads with all the fervor of youth, but the girl dare not yield, and his pride battles with the anguish which kills the soul, though the body yet lives.

Gene finds his mother waiting for him; she sees the stricken look, that goes to her heart, and she tries to comfort him. He will carry the scar to the grave. He feels all is lost save ambition. Gently the mother chides him. Ambition will never make him happy. Could she have her way she would have him a simple farmer, marry and settle down for a long and happy life. His uncle John is a good manager, but has spoiled him for the happy contented life. If she were sure the forces of his nature were always to be arrayed on the side of right, she would not mind. She is assured he will never yield to the power of gold, but she knows his weakness—the insatiable appetite for power, and this fear comes, because he has broken with all religious traditions. The mother's heart is breaking because she knows that the width width of poles lies between them. The parting comes; the mother cries, "I didn't know it would be so hard!" Theta Rosslyn hears the cry, and laying her hands on the mother's shoulders softly says, "God will take care of him."

Years pass and Eugene Warfield is in Excelsior, the home of the Harvester Trust and no longer an unknown lawyer. The boyish look is gone forever and the lines of power deepen. He finishes the last page of a paper and with the exclamation, "I am glad it is finished!" the door opens and Judge Blodgett enters. Gene tells him he has arrived in the nick of time. The Judge remarks he is at it as usual. "Writing out the speeches and learning them that I may, like Webster, deliver impromptu the next day," Gene replies, smiling. The legal battle seems like a hopeless undertaking. He will fight until they crush him. The Judge sees young men as able as he caught between the upper and nether millstone, the Trusts, and he hopes Gene will feel his way carefully; he's never had a son and Gene has come to be almost like one to him. It isn't the Trusts, but the brains which conceive them, the stupendous power summed up in one word, Corcoran. Gene promises to go to the reception given in honor of Mrs. Huston's sister-in-law and her daughter, Miss Victoria Moore, of Washington, D. C. He orders his horse and rides out of town and across the open prairie. Leaving his horse to graze, he stands on a rising swell of ground. A horse and its rider come into Warfield's range of vision. There is a misstep and horse and rider fall. Gene rushes to the spot—the rider is unhurt. The horse is badly injured and the woman orders the animal put out of his misery; he objects. If he is afraid to do it, she will shoot him herself. Gene takes the deadly top pistol out of her hand and commands her to stand with her back to him. There is a blinding flash and the poor brute is dead. In the absence of Mrs. Grundy they ought to be introduced, and she presents he can't shall be a serviced in plantage of the head of the Trust, but has

CHAPTER V.

MEETING WITH CORCORAN AND WARFIELD'S FALL.

N the morning following the encounter with Victoria, Warfield sat alone in his office with a mass of papers spread out on the desk, busily engaged in incorporating into his speech some new evidence in connection with the Harvester Trust case which had arrived the night before night before.

At last the task was finished and laying aside his work, he fell into a fit of musing, his straight brows drawing together in a frown and his strong hands clinching and unclinching themselves nervously. Then he started suddenly to his feet, as the sound of heavy footfalls broke upon his ear.

"It sounds like the tread of doom!" he exclaimed aloud.

Then creakily, noisily the hinges moved and a veritable Son of Anak, six feet three inches tall, and broad as the door itself, although without an ounce of superfluous flesh on the huge frame, entered. Gene, a tall man as men go, was dwarfed into insignificance beside him. Their faces, strangely enough, were alike, yet unlike. The younger man's might have stood as a model for Cæsar at a like age, while the face of the other might have represented the same Cæsar at the time he wrote home that laconic despatch, "Veni, Vidi, Vici."

As the two men faced each other, there was challenge in the eyes of each.

"Mr. Corcoran, I believe?" said Gene, motioning the other to a chair and again seating himself at his desk.

"The same," replied Corcoran as he sat down in the biggest chair the office contained. Without further formalities he began: "Mr. Warfield, there is a certain matter I have come today to speak about, and not to take up any today to speak about, and not to take up any more of your valuable time than is necessary," with a glance at the scattered manuscript on the desk, "I will state at once my mission." That opening sentence, so direct to the point, was characteristic of Corcoran.

Born in New York, of Irish parentage, he had been first a bootblack, then a newsboy, then a pressman. The family moved West and Michael being by that time a young man and having saved a little of his earnings took up a claim and became a landowner on a small scale. Wearying of this he sold out and went into the saloon business, which really gave but which had under all its softness the iron scale. Wearying of this he sold out and went into the saloon business, which really gave him his start in life. Once started, however, a fit of restlessness took possession of him. Exploiting a few poor workingmen and their families seemed altogether too slow a way of getting rich and he cast about for some quicker method by which to attain the desired object. His short experience as an agriculturist taught him that no prey is so easy as the farming class. Thus in his fertile brain was hatched the germ of what ultimately grew to be the Harvester Trust. Bit by bit this gigantic monopoly was built up until, in the course of time, the quondam bootblack found himself the possessor of millions. His brain, as previously stated, was fertile, and by his association with people of wealth and culture he action with people of wealth and culture he acquired an ease and charm of manner which secured for him a cordial welcome in the highest circles.

He married into one of New York's most exclusive families, but despite this fact, he made no attempt to disguise his humble origin. His he so well knew how to assume on occasion, but which had under all its softness the iron ring of determination.

"Warfield, I have placed before you the case as it stands. As you are well aware it is no idle boast on my part to say in this region I am ruler. I can create and I can destroy; I can imprison and I can set free; I can degrade and I can elevate; I can impoverish and enrich, and I can commercially, socially and politically make or break in the city of Excelsior and its environs. If you defy me I will crush you. If you will become my friend, my ally, you shall grow great by my power."

As Corcoran's vain-glorious utterance came to an end, Gene, who had listened with ill-concealed impatience, arose to his feet and burst out impetuously:

"Do you take me for a dastard that you dare to come here with such a damnable proposition? What do I care for your power! Drive me out of this town—hound me to the last ditch and I will fight you there! I won't soil my hands with your dirty business! Do your House Victoria glanced up and caught Gene's look of admiration and smiled.

The power—the terrible power—that lies in a woman's smile! A woman's smile—a thing as evanescent as the sparkle on a glass of champagne—yet it is for this empires have crumbled. For Cleopatra's smile Mark Antony flung away a world. How we love them—the lips that smile at us!

Gene gazed until he could see her no longer then turned back as the suave voice of Corcoran again fell upon his ear.

"Warfield, I give you your choice."

On one hand were all the years of unstained manhood, on the other the picture Corcoran had drawn of himself seated among that exalted three hundred and sixty in the House of Representatives. In that hour he forgot his mother's parting words. His mother's face, too, was dimmed by the years and a younger and fairer face had come between. As on the night before, he heard beautiful scornful red lips saying: "I adore ambitious people, the people who accomplish things."

"Yes sir, I am choosing." Gene's face at that instant wore the look which in Milton's beautiful allegory that of Lucifer, Star of the Morning may have worn when he led the first hosts out of Heaven.

Corcoran smiled as he grasped Warfield's outstretched hand.

"Warfield, you have made a wise choice and one you are not likely to regret. As concerns worst! I defy you!" As he hurled the last words at his opponent Gene struck the desk a resounding blow with his fist and then walked over to a window.

There was a smile on Corcoran's lips as he expecting some such explosion, so he waited a little and then resumed:

"Warfield, I add mire your grit. It isn't every many who would defy Corcoran to his teeth."

Once he visited the early home of his parents in Ireland, and his princely generosity while there is still spoken of with much kindness by the inhabitants.

the inhabitants.

Early in his career he had adopted Napoleon's motto: "Every man has his price," and he had added to this with his accustomed cynicism: "Every woman has hers also."

With some it was love, with others it was diamonds and with still others it was power, but, whatever it was, once Corcoran set his heart moon winning a woman he seldom failed to grate. upon winning a woman he seldom failed to grat-ify his desire. His wife, poor thing, made the mistake of loving him and was slowly dying of a broken heart because of his many infidelities.

Having built up this huge monopoly, he gave up its active management to brains having the commercial instinct more strongly developed, and for a few years devoted himself to a life of

But his millions, his private car, his stud of race horses, his yacht and his numerous estates palled upon him. He realized that millionaires are as common as mushrooms and not nearly so well prized, and so having van-quished the realm of finance, sighing, like Alexander, for new worlds to conquer, he turned his attention to politics, finding on the political battlefield the excitement which his restless mind constantly crayed, and made him-

"Warfield, I admire your grit. It isn't every man who would defy Corcoran to his teeth. At the same time you are making a serious mistake. You will remember the maxim they mistake. You will remember the maxim they used to write in our copy books when we went to school: 'Opportunity knocks once at every man's door.' It is knocking at your door today. Years ago it knocked at mine and I opened to it. I began by having some such opened to it. I began by having some cherishing, and I have lived to learn their fallacy. You have lived the life of an ascetic, you might have been a monk for all the enjoyment you have gotten out of life. I, on the contrary, have lived my life to the full. I have not spared myself the cuddling of a single sense delight and yet today there is not a man in all this broad land who holds himself too great to doff his hat to Corcoran. After all, Warner of the contract of the con field, a man can but live his life. We have no knowledge of any previous existence—we do not know whether there is to be any future existence—the only life we know anything about is the one we are living now. Your destiny lies in your own hands. You can drive opporlies in your own hands. You can drive opportunity away and go back to the hoe and the plow," he paused long enough to note the effect of his words—for Gene had turned around Alexander, for new worlds to conquer, he turned his attention to political, finding on the political battlefield the excitement which his restless mind constantly craved, and made himself absolute master over the minds of the men he swayed.

Such was a career which may be likened to see the dark flush which arose to his brow and noted that his shot had gone home. The thought of returning with defeat upon him was bitter to Warfield at that moment—"or you can arise gloriously to meet it. Listen!

Today there are eighty millions of people in the United States. Representing these eighty millions there are three hundred and sixty odd members of Congress. I have power eighty millions there are three hundred and sixty odd members of Congress. I have power to take you from your lonesome place among these eighty millions and seat you in the envied circle of these potent three hundred and sixty. I give you your choice. Defy me and I will crush you; become my friend and I will place you among the highest of the land." Although he was scarcely conscious of the fact Gene was anxious as he listened to the words of Corcoran. He suddenly turned back to the open window, then something in the street caught his attention.

In an open carriage sat a beautiful woman. She was robed in palest azure, on her head a striking hat, and above her fair brow a sunburst of auburn hair.

A sigh of admiration broke from Gene and hearing this the other looked out to ascertain the cause and himself stood at gaze, his heart stirring at the sight of the woman's beauty. "How lovely she is!" thought Corcoran. "I wonder who she can be—I must find out and seek an introduction. If I am not mistaken that is the Huston's coachman on the box. I think I will have to call."

"Warfield, you have made a wise choice and one you are not likely to regret. As concerns the Harvester Trust case I look to you to do all I suggested would be required of you on my first introduction. As to your nomination to Congress the preliminaries shall receive my carliest extention. congress the preliminaries shall receive my earliest attention. I recognize your ability and feel that in you I have gained a powerful ally. Rest assured all power shall be exerted in your behalf. THE TREMBLE OF HIDDEN CHORDS.

"Now, father, I can't allow you to go into court looking like that. Your tie is crooked, and you have dropped cigar ashes on your vest, and I declare if you haven't got on a pair of frayed cuffs. You wait until I run upstairs and get another pair!"

The Harvester Trust case is to be tried today, and I don't want to miss any of it." said the judge as he submitted to being brushed and tidied generally.

"I understood," said Mrs. Blodgett with a twinkle in her eye, "that when you gave up the active practice of law you intended to have nothing further to do with it."

"Well, mother, I can't help taking an interest in it because of Gene. I went to hear him in his final summing up today. That speech of his is a rattling good one although I didn't tell him so. Modesty is rare among the young men of the present generation, and when I find it I take care not to rub off any of its pristine freshness. Of course, I expect him to be defeated. It couldn't be otherwise with judge, jury, every mother's son of them with a fat fee from Corcoran safely tucked away in his inside mother's son of them with a fat fee from Corcoran safely tucked away in his inside pocket. All the same I want to be in at the death for I know Gene will make a glorious end. And don't pretend you don't want me to go for I know better, for you are half in love with Gene yourself."

Mrs. Blodgett smiled.
"He is a real lovable young man. I think it is because he cares so much for his mother, and always speaks so tenderly of her. If I had ever had always the bould have would him to be like that a son I should have wanted him to be like that. And, father, I don't half like his sudden feeling for that Miss Moore. Mrs. Huston tells me he is very attentive; every afternoon he sends up a box of flowers and follows it in the evening. I don't like Victoria Moore. She doesn't ap-

I don't like Victoria Moore. She doesn't appeal to me as being the sort of woman to make any man happy, and surely not Gene."
"Fie, mother," returned the judge, laughing, "you are all alike—you women. Let a pretty girl come among you and the red rag is out at once—you're all jealous of a lovely face. If Miss Moore is only half as good as she is beautiful she will do very well for Warfield. I can't say I admire the full-blown style of beauty. In fact, I much prefer elderly ladies, especially one, with a handsome face and wavy white hair. I never cared for the Titian shade some people raye over."

With an affectionate pat Mrs. Blodgett fin-ished the toilet, and hurried the judge off to the . .

AN IMPORTANT DOCUMENT.

ICHARD CLARKE was seated in his room at the inn. The apartment was perhaps the best that rude tavern afforded, though it could hardly be considered luxurious in its appointments. In one corner stood a cot bedstead. There was a chair at each window, and a small table, perhaps two feet square, between, over which hung a looking-glass of scanty dimensions, which suffered under the further disadvantage of having been fractured by some careless occupant of the room in times past. There was no washstand, guests being expected to perform their ablutions below. At the lawyer's special request, a tin washbowl had been furnished, which stood on the table before mentioned, while a large tin dipper supplied the place of the ICHARD CLARKE was seated in

The lawyer was seated on one chair while his extended limbs found a resting-place on another. A mug of cider on the table near by indicated that he was disposed to be convivial. A complacent smile which played over his features evinced that he was in a contented frame of mind.

"I've got him under my thumb," he solilo-quized. "Thanks to my knowledge of human nature I read him at once, and made up my nature I read him at once, and made up my mind how to deal with him. I can see plainly enough that he doesn't particularly relish having me for a son-in-law. The old fellow's pride sticks to him yet. That's unfortunate for him, for it must be humbled. I have a shrewd suspicion, too, that the young lady won't be altogether willing to accept Dick Clarke as a substitute for that young spark of a Davenport. He seems to be quite a trim young gallant, and is handsomer than I ever was. I am very glad to say that I have a proper appreciation of my own want of beauty. I remember my father used to say, 'Dick's a rough-looking fellow but bell mediants. I remember my father used to say, 'Dick's a rough-looking fellow, but he'll make his way in the world.' I mean to verify the old gentleman's prediction, if I live long enough. Let me take another look at the precious document which is go to speak the corrections. ment which is, so to speak, the corner-stone of my prosperity."

Dick Clarke carefully drew from an inner pocket a letter somewhat rumpled. It was directed on the outside to Joseph Parkhurst.

"The old gentleman would give something to get hold of this," said the lawyer complacently. "With it he might snap his fingers at me, and leave me to crawl back to my dusty office at my leisure."

By Horatio Alger, Jr.

He opened the document and read it, for the hundredth time, it may be. As, however, it will be new to the reader, it may be well to transcribe its contents and set them before him.

"MY DEAR SON JOSEPH:

"My DEAR SON JOSEPH:

"Although it may prove to be unnecessary, yet in order to avoid all risk, in the event of any unforeseen contingency, such as my sudden death, I have thought proper to set down succinctly a step which I have felt it a matter of prudence to take, together with the reasons which have impelled me to take it.

"I need hardly say that, through inheritance and otherwise, I am the possessor of what is reckoned in these colonies a considerable fortune, amounting to not very far from twenty thousand pounds, and perhaps more. This will, in the natural course of events, descend to you, my only son. But in the present troubled state of the country the letter bore date December, 1779] while a struggle is pending between the mother country and these colonies, the issue of which is doubtful, the security of possession is, as a matter of course, greatly endangered. It is for this reason that I have endeavored to preserve an outside neutrality. Yet as suspicions may arise, and as so often happens in such a struggle, I may on some pretext be deprived of my property, I have thought it my duty to adopt some means of preserving at least a part of it to you independent of contingency."

"What a prosy and long-winded old fellow," myttered Dick. "He might as well have come

"What a prosy and long-winded old fellow," muttered Dick. "He might as well have come to the point in half a dozen lines. But the best part of it is to come."
He resumed the reading of the letter, and we will follow his example.

He resumed the reading of the letter, and we will follow his example.

"I have, therefore, with as much secrecy as possible realized the money value of one half of my property, and at various times, as frequently as I dared, contrived to convert it into gold pieces. These I carefully laid away in a stout box, which now lies concealed. The chief object of this communication is to reveal to you the place of concealment, that if I should be taken away during your absence, the secret may not die with me.

"You will remember that small tract of land, embracing perhaps a couple of acres, at the upper part of the island, on which stands the cottage occupied by Black Phœbe, your old nurse. Being so much out of the way, I decided that this would be the best place of concealment which I could select. After some reflection I decided not to let her into the secret, and accordingly contrived a pretext for her temporary absence, during which the box was conveyed by night to the spot, and buried at the foot of a tree. There will be no difficulty in finding the place, since, as you will perhaps remember, there is but this one tree on the place. It is an old apple tree now past bearing, and stands just in the rear of the house. A hole was dug, four feet in depth, at the northeast corner, and the box, being deposited therein, was carefully covered over, the superfluous dirt being removed, so that there might be no trace left of the place having been disturbed.

"In this box will be found ten thousand pounds in gold—a sum that will enable you to live comfortably and as befits your station, even if you should be deprived of your remaining possessions. I trust, however, that this may not be the case, and that my precaution may prove to have been unnecessary. But however this may be, I shall feel that I have done my duty in adopting this prudent measure in your behalf.

"I am sensibly affected, my dear son, when I reflect that if you are ever to read this paper it will probably be when I am laid in the grave. Let me then speak as be "In conclusion, my son, I will subscribe myself, "Your affectionate father, John Parkhurst."

"The old gentleman little dreamed for whose eye he was writing," thought the lawyer. "If he had, he wouldn't have been quite so affectionate in his address—though it may turn out that I shall become, if not his son, the next thing to it—his grandson."

Dick Clarke slowly folded up this letter and replaced it in his pocket.

"I remember the old gentleman," he said musingly. "He was the very essence of respectability with his powdered hair, kneebreeches, and all that—I little suspected at the time that I should ever stand in any near relation to him, and I fancy that it was quite as far from his thoughts. Let them talk as they may of Dame Fortune, she can do a fellow a good turn now and then, and she has chosen to be kind to me. This beautiful wild flower has been growing up in the woods for me, and faith, I'll wear it."

His soliloquy was interrupted by the en-trance of the landlord, who thrust his head in at the door, saying:

"There's a lady downstairs would like to see you, Mr. Clarke. Will you go down and see you, Mr. Clarke. Will you go down and see her?"

"A lady!" exclaimed the lawyer, starting from his chair in surprise. "Who is it?"

"Squire Parkhurst's daughter."

"Mabel!" returned Clarke, in surprise. "I will be down directly."

It must be admitted that Jerry felt rich. Not only had he the piece given by Mr. Maxwell, but he had also the half-dollar given him by Henry Davenport.
"If I keep on I'll be a millionaire," said he to

"If keep on I'll be a millionaire," said he to himself, while at work in the garden patch. "I'm having a regular flood of good fortune." It was such a fine day that the boy could not resist the temptation, some time later, to slip down to the pond for a swim. He had a the field, when he saw Mabel coming along the road that led to Hill's Tavern. The girl showed that she was much agitated, and Jerry stepped behind a tree to watch her.

"Perhaps she's going to call on that strange man," he mused.

As Mabel came up to the tree she paused, and As Madel came up to the tree she paused, and Jerry was amazed to see her wipe two big tears from her cheeks. She gave a sob and leaned against the tree trunk for support.

"Oh, it doesn't matter, Jerry! Never mind!"
"Yes, it does. I don't want to see you cry," he answered bluntly. "Have you had some

"No, Jerry."
"Then maybe the squire's been scolding

"No. It—it's something else."
"Can't I help you?"
At this query Mabel smiled faintly. She loved Jerry, and his open-heartedness always appealed to her.

"I don't see how you can help me," she said.
"Perhaps I can, Miss Mabel. Anyway, I'm willing to try real hard."

"Jerry, you are very, very good."
"But what is it all about? Won't you tell me?

Mabel paused. More than once in the past she had trusted Jerry with her secrets, and he had never betrayed her confidence. She trusted him far more than she did Mehitable. "Jerry, did you meet that man who came to see my father?" she questioned.
"Yes, of course I did."
"I mean, did you get the chance to talk to him?"

"Yes, I met him in the woods and showed him the way to the house."
"What did you think of him?"
"I didn't like him much," was the prompt

"Why not? Don't be afraid to tell me.

"Never mind his nose, Jerry."

"Is he the man that has made trouble for you?"

"I am afraid that he is trying to make trouble both for father and myself. But you must not speak of this to anybody else, Jerry."
"I won't—if you want it that way, Miss Mabel. You know I can keep mum when I want to."

"Yes, I know that."

"What kind of trouble is he trying to make?" "It's a long story, Jerry. It seems that years ago my grandfather hid away a lot of gold in a

"Yes, I agree with you."
"You couldn't marry a better," went on Jerry

"That's so. What about this gold in a box? What is that man going to do with it?"
"He says he will turn it over to my father on one condition."
"And what is that?"
"You won't mention it, Jerry?"
"Not upless you won't me to."

"You won't mention it, Jerry?"
"Not unless you want me to."
"He won't give up the gold unless I promise to marry him," and Mabel turned her face away to hide her burning cheeks.
"What, marry that fellow!" ejaculated the boy in open disgust. "Marry that old pugnose! Don't you do it, Miss Mabel! Why, he ain't worth your little finger!"
"I do not wish to marry him."
"And you say he'll keep the gold if you won't."

"And you say he'll keep the gold if you won't."

"That is what he told my father. I have not spoken to him."

"But why does he want to marry you if he doesn't know you?"

"Father says he is anxious to elevate himself socially. Mr. Clarke—that's his name—says he used to see me in New York when I went to school there, and admired me in secret."

"Well, I can't blame him for that, Miss Mabel—you're so beautiful. But he's ugly—I wouldn't have him for a gift."

"I do not want him. But I do not wish to see my father suffer, Jerry. He has been used to a fine social position in New York, and life out here in the wilderness is very irksome to him. If he had the gold that his father hid away in that box, he could go back to the city and assume his old place among his friends."

"Well, I wouldn't mind going to the city myself. But I don't hanker to be so awful rich."

"I would be content to stay here." answered

"I would be content to stay here," answered the girl.

"There ought to be some way by which yo could make this Mr. Clarke give up that gold, went on Jerry, after a thoughtful pause. "If I was your father I'd make him do it."

"It is not so easy to do things out here as it would be in the city, Jerry. Officers of the law are scarce, and nearly every man is a law unto himself, as the saying is."
"Yes, I know that. Why, they even let that fellow go who stole Hill's brown mare. In some places that rascal would have been hung."
"Begidge that my father is not as young as

"Besides that, my father is not as young as he used to be, and even if we had this Mr. Clarke arrested, it would be difficult to prove anything against him. Of course he would deny everything."

"Then he didn't tell you where the gold was?"

"Oh no."

"Oh, no."
"Perhaps it's a falsehood—there may not be any gold No. I think he speaks the truth."

"No, I think he speaks the truth."
"Is he still staying at Hill's Tavern?"
"Yes. I am on my way there now."
"What are you going to do?"
"I am going to try to reason with him and see if we cannot get the fortune from him without my marrying him.

"He doesn't look like a chap that would reason with anybody, Miss Mabel. He's got a regular bullet head."
"I shall do my best with him."
"But if he refuses you, what then?"
At this question the girl shook her head sorrowfully. "I am sure I don't know what will happen after that, Jerry."

"Well, don't you marry him, no matter what you do. Why, if you did that, you'd break Mr. Davenport's heart, Miss Mabel."

At these words the girl's tears flowed afresh. "Do you really think that, Jerry?"

"Yes, I do. He's head over heels in love with you, and if you are going to marry anybody you ought to marry him," answered the boy, and after a few words more the talk came to an end, and the pair separated; Jerry to continue his labor, and Mabel to resume her journey to Hill's Tavern.

CHAPTER XIV.

TRYING TO MAKE TERMS.

The lawyer, in spite of his frank confession of want of beauty, did not fail to pay some attention to his external appearance before going down to meet Mabel. He retied his cravat, which was awry, and with the aid of a comb and brush brought into somewhat better order the shock of hair that usually received little attention.

On many accounts the interview was one Mabel dreaded. She had come to plead with a man whom she did not know to resign his claims to her hand. She could not think of him without repugnance. Perhaps, indeed, she might be charged with indelicacy in coming slove to see him but she was so straightforalone to see him, but she was so straightforward, and impatient of delay, that she could not endure suspense and wished to bring not endure suspense and wished to bring matters to a point.

The lawyer came in with a smile that was meant to be encouraging, and bowing low, remarked, "Miss Mabel Parkhurst, I believe."

Mabel inclined her head gravely, while she answered: "You are right, sir. You are, I believe, Mr. Richard Clarke of New York."

"I am, and I may add that it affords me pleasure to make the personal acquaintance of one whose face has been familiar for years."

Mabel could not assure him of her own pleasure, and therefore remained silent.

"This is a charming country of yours," said the lawyer complaisantly. "These green woods and beautiful meadows make me think of fairyland. I had no expectation of finding the and beautiful meadows make me think of fairy-land. I had no expectation of finding the wilderness so attractive."

"Yes, it is pleasant," said Mabel absently. She was thinking how she might introduce the subject of her errand.

"But your father appears to be better pleased with city life," remarked Clarke, glancing shrewdly at his visitor.

"You have called on my father?" said Mabel abruptly.

abruptly.
"I had that pleasure. What a charming ituation you have."

Impatient of this irrelevant speech, and de-Impatient of this irrelevant speech, and desirous of shortening the interview as far as possible, Mabel took no notice of this complimentary observation, but proceeded: "He has informed me of the business that induced your coming."

"I beg you to believe that it is with the greatest gratification that I unexpectedly find it in my power to restore your father and yourself to the position for which nature designed you."

you."
This Richard Clarke said with the air of one who was conferring a favor from the most disinterested of motives.

Mabel looked at him in surprise. "Perhaps my father has misunderstood you—I hope he did—but he mentioned something about a condition."
She reused in some emberrassment

She paused in some embarrassment.

"I did name a condition, Miss Parkhurst—a condition I earnestly hope you will regard with favor."

"This condition," said Mabel, determined to get through the interview as soon as possible, "this condition related to myself. You must pardon my directness, but I do not like circumlocution and wish to come to an understanding at once."

"You are quite right," said the lawyer, "and little work of the same to the lawyer, and little work of the lawyer, and little work of the lawyer."

I thank you for coming to the point, and since the opportunity is afforded me, allow me to say that, though it is the first occasion of my speak-ing with you, I have long known and admired you."

'You have the advantage of me, sir," said

Mabel with reserve.
"Yet let me hope that this will not prejudice "Yet let me hope that this will not prejudice you against me. In proposing for your hand as I did to your father, I acted from no hasty impulse, but from a well-considered determination. Think that in acceding to my request, you not only bestow happiness upon your unworthy admirer, but also secure the restoration of your father and yourself to that sphere which is most congenial to you."
"As for myself," said Mabel, "I have no desire to leave the country home that I have found so attractive. I was never so happy in the city as I have been here."
Mabel did not analyze the sources of her hap-

Mabel did not analyze the sources of her happiness. Perhaps no one ever does so. But it is questionable whether Henry Davenport's presnot have ma ence would not have made the city more attractive than the country.

"Perhaps I was wrong with regard to yourself," said Clarke, bowing gallantly. "The country does indeed seem to be the fit abiding-place of the flowers—more especially of the rose, the queen of flowers."

Mabel listened coldly and deigned no acknowledgment of the compliment. After pausing long enough for an answer to be made if one was intended, the speaker went on: "But your father—he at least would much prefer the city?"

He would. He has never enjoyed himself "He would. He has never enjoyed nimsen much in the country, and his happiness would doubtless be much promoted by a return to the scenes and acquaintances with which he was once familiar."

"It is fortunate, then, that this return is now open to him," said the lawyer, looking stealthily at his fair companion.

his fair companion.
"And how is it open to him?" asked Mabel,

"And how is it open to him?" asked Madel, fixing her eyes steadily upon the lawyer.
"By his acceptance of my offer," said Clarke, not without betraying a little confusion.
"Mr. Clarke, I have come here with the intention of being entirely frank with you. The condition you have proposed is one that it is quite impossible for my father to comply with."
"Impossible!"

"Yes, for two reasons. The first is that my father, whatever other claims he may have up-on me, has no authority over my hand and its disposal. I am convinced that he does not desire to have."

CONDUCTED BY UNCLE CHARLIE

PRIL Fool! That's what Toby and Billy the Goat said to me last year and for good reasons. A man told me he'd give me ten dollars for a dozen post holes. Another person drove up to our chicken coop, and begged me to go and buy him three quarts of pigeons' milk, as his wife was dying, and the doctor said she must have it quick. I'm a good-natured old slob, ready to do anybody a turn, and there was I rushing all over New England for post holes, and pigeons' milk. I wouldn't have cared, if I could have got them, but nobody seemed to have any for sale and in several stores that I entered, they called me an April Fool, and seemed to have any for sale and in several stores that I entered, they called me an April Fool, and threw things at me. I've asked lots of people why it was that everyone acted so crazy, and why it is no one keeps these indispensable articles of commerce for sale, but I can't get any sane or sensible replies from anyone;—they just pucker up their faces, and laugh all over me, and tell me that people were only stringing me and handing me a lemon. But I didn't have any string on my person, and as for lemons. I and handing me a lemon. But I didn't have any string on my person, and as for lemons, I never saw one. I've no doubt that poor woman died uttering imprecations on my head, and wondering why I didn't bring the pigeons' milk, that would have saved her life. When I first went on the stage, I had to play an old man's part, and they sent me out to buy a tencent box of wrinkles. I searched the town, and couldn't get 'em. In the meat store, the man said his grandfather had a choice collection of couldn't get 'em. In the meat store, the man said his grandfather had a choice collection of them he would sell cheap, but after I had found the old man, I discovered they were all on his face, and they were the wrinkles that wouldn't come off. But I had to have 'em, and I was tearing the old man's hide off his face, when the police arrested me. Well, I got out of that scrape, and rushed back to the Opera House, and say they were having fits!!! Then they chased me out to get the key of the curtain, from the manager of the Opera House. This guy was a crusty low forehead; and when I said key of the curtain, and must have it at once, or else they couldn't get the curtain raised, and start the performance, well, he just yelled murder. He sent me to the meat market, velled murder. He sent me to the meat market.

once, or esse they couldn't get the curtain raised, and start the performance, well, he just yelled murder. He sent me to the meat market, and they sent me to the undertakers and the overture was playing when I rushed into the Opera House, and fell exhausted on two bloodhounds (we were playing Uncle Tom's Cabin), and the dogs didn't do a thing to me. Later on they told me I must go to the drug store, and get ten cents' worth of drum salve for the drum, as it was dead sore from being beaten so much, and the drummer was afraid to pound it for fear it would die. I hated to think of the poor drum suffering for want of a little salve, and so I went to the drug store, and the pill man called me a fresh guy and drew a gun on me. I didn't get the salv., and the drum was awful sore about it. Ah, me I've had a sad life. Please bear in mind, that I want you all to hustle round among your friends, and get seven fifteen-cent-"subs" for COMFORT, and get one of Uncle Charlie's books of poems. This is the first favor I have ever asked of my nephews and nieces, and it is a very, very small one indeed, as the effort is trifling, and the reward is altogether out of proportion to the task. In a nutsnell the proposition is this: Send one dollar and five cents to COMFORT and they will send the best magazine in the world for one year to seven of your friends and a superbly gotten up book full of rib-tickling, mirthprovoking, laughter-raising pieces, that will keep you in good humor for the rest of your rise. The book contains my autograph, and is sold in Western stores for one dollar. You can readily sell it after you have read it, and be a half a dollar ahead. selves seated in the large dining-room of the Union Station with the good things of the table rapidly disappearing before us. As our train did not leave until 9.30 we still had plenty of time to go down to the Water Front and visit the Ainsworth Dock owned by the O. R. and N. Co.

Breakfast being over, we started out through the terminal yards, and after crossing a number of tracks we soon came to the water front where the Stevedores were loading the beautiful steamship Columbia with precious freight bound for the earthquake city of San Francisco.

Eight-thirty found us leaving the Ainsworth Dock to find our train, the Chicago Portland Special being made up there for its far Eastern journey. Hastily glancing over our train we find she is as beautiful as any of the great trans-continental trains entering the city of Portland. As she stands on the sidetrack before the watting-rooms of the Union Depot, we glance at the locomotive a thing of life and beauty, spinning over the rails with the grace of a serpent, her great electric searchlight will pierce the inky darkness of night for thirty telegraph poles shead. As the depot master calls out the hour of departure, we swing ourselves up into one of the day coaches for our journey up the Columbia. With a clang of the bell on the giant locomotive we find ourselves gliding from the Union Station onto the steel bridge. Here we catch a glimpse of all the crafts for miles up and down the mighty Willamette.

Glancing from our car window we watch the everchanging panaroms of rivers, valleys, mountains and trees gradually fade away in the distance. Scarce thirty minutes have passed till we rush over the Sandy River and glant mountains loom up around us. Scarce three minutes have passed since leaving the Sandy till we thunder into the great Columbia Gorge.

The gray monolith known as Rooster Rock, seems to stand like a sentinel guarding the entrance to the great Gorge of the Columbia. The Redmen regarded the great gray monolith as a god, and prayed to the mighty Manitou to st canal for the handling of traffic by water which would probably run opposition to the railways on either side of the river and bring reduced rates to the farmers of the Great Inland Empire who find a good market for all of their produce in the city of Portland. The O. R. and N. Co's. main line follows the Columbia for a distance of 200 miles, giving the tourist and settler the chance of seeing some of the finest scenery in the world. At Biggs Junction I leave the train while my chun, goes farther on to the East, taking the train on the Columbia Southern which runs through the Southern part of the Great Inland Empire known the world over as being the greatest, cereal-raising country in the United States.

Your nephew,

L. M. Nelson.

L. M. Nelson.

Lawrence, your trip up the Columbia River is admirably described, though I am somewhat inclined to believe you've been biting several chunks out of the identical guide book that I drew on when I made the same trip some fifteen years ago in company with Mr. Lewis, and Mrs. Clarke. We were sent by President Madison, who built the Madison Square Theater, to assist in discovering the Pacific Coast, and the home of the waters of the canned salmon. Incidentally we discovered Mount Hood, named for Mr. Hood, the Sarsaparilla man, and Mr. Hood presented us with a bottle of his liquid for that tired feeling which I contracted several years before I was born, and which I have been most violently afflicted with ever since. All the people who climb Mount Hood have that tired feeling before they reach the top, so it is a good thing they can take something for it. I have been taking something for my tired feeling for several hundred years, but I don't seem to effect a cure. Harking back to your letter, Lawrence, you say that as you started, the clock struck out the hour of seven. That means that you have only 23 hours per day in Portland. "23." that is the skiddon started, the clock struck out the hour of seven. That means that you have only 23 hours per day in Portland, "23," that is the skiddoo number. A clock that strikes out the hours as recklessly as this ought to be arrested, and made to do time, instead of trying to keep time. A nice thing, indeed to have an hour a day struck out of your life, just when you probably need it most. Time is a precious commodity, and it is an outrage that you should let your clock destroy the precious hours thus. You'll get an eight-hour day in Portland, without any legislation from Congress, if that old clock keeps up its monkey shines.

out any legislation from Congress, if that old clock keeps up its monkey shines.

You also say that when you got into the dining-room at the depot, you "witnessed the good things of the table disappearing before us." If a restaurant is intended for anything it is to provide food for hungry people, and yet you no sooner enter than they grab up the doughnuts, coffee, sinkers, and tableware, and run for their lives. It is very suspicious when food disappears before you—looks as though you hadn't the price to pay for it. Food, should disappear into you, and down you, but never before you. Your description implies that some other Gink chewed up all the grub, before you got your looks, and beat it to the basement with the grub ornaments until you had transferred your features to another climate. You say the electric searchlight will pierce the inky darkness for thirty telegraph poles ahead. When I was out there the headlight on the engine would pierce the darkness for nothing at gine would pierce the darkness for nothing at a hay wagon to haul them to the post-cifice.

Adam, your letter has greatly distressed me. I have shed many buckets of bitter tears over it. I started this League to enable young folks to get together for mutual improvement, and by the exchange of interesting and helpful letters, learn more about each other and the grand country in which we live. My intentions were of the best, my idea solely to do good, and I have endeavored by every means in my power to keep this League above reproach, and permit no questionable character to get into it. That's what I've tried to do, and I find my aims and endeavors have come to naught, and the whole League disgraced by the action of one of its members, and if you'll read Adam's letter, you'll know who that member is. I hear you say. 'Uncle Charlie, what have I done to incur your wrath and displeasure?'' Adam, don't ask me, don't ask me, but look at your letter, and read there the confession you have made publicly to six millions of people—of an act of infamy that I cannot permit to go unchallenged, an act that will certainly bring you into the clutches of the law, if you don't immediately reform and lead a law-abiding, reputable life, as all young men should. You come before this majestic tribunal, this superb utable life, as all young men should. You come before this majestic tribunal, this superb multitude of America's best people, without a blush on your voice, or a tremor on your cheek, and inform us in the coolest and most matter-of-fact way that you have been "Firing on the railroad!" Apparently you have been engaged of-fact way that you have been "Firing on the railroad!" Apparently you have been engaged in this sanguinary work for one year, and no one will ever know what ruin and destruction has been the result of your actions. Firing on the railroad! Can't you hear the bullets crashing through the Pullman car windows, and perforating the passengers as they lie asleep in their berths, or sit at the dinnertables pushing pie into their faces. Ah, it's terrible to think of the ruin and destruction that ensues, when a young man quits the paths of rectitude, and gun in hand goes out to fire on the railroad. Oh, Adam, do promise you will discard your gun forever, and quit this terrible work of making widows and orphans. Cousins, let us all beg Adam to be a good boy and behave. Some of us may be traveling on the very road that he is firing on, and then maybe we'll come home with umpty steen the very road that he is firing on, and then maybe we'll come home with umpty steen bullets in our refrigerators. The thing is too terrible to contemplate, and it's going to stop, or Adam can't stay in the League. Toby says Adam only fires on the engine. Well, that's just as bad, the engineer's life is just as precious to him as anyone elses. If Adam fired on the engine and hit the engineer, then we'd have a wreck sure. Adam writes me that he'd like to meet an Eve, if there are any Eves in the League. The only eve I know is Christmas Eve, and until Adam quits firing on the railroad, we won't introduce him to a single Eve, no sir, not even Christmas Eve. We must get Even somehow.

Box 117, Sheboygan, R. F. D., 5, Wis.

My Dear Uncle Charlie:

I'll write you a letter, and hope to find you in good spirits. I used to be a watchman in the furniture warehouse of McAush, Dwyer Co., of Chicago, which was located here. Shortly after March 7th last, it was destroyed by fire, and my job "went up in smoke." Since then, I have had quite an uphill struggle again, to make "both ends meet," and they're still quite a distance apart yet. I have had an awful time with my stomach for the past seven years, or nearly that, and in consequence, cannot do any hard or heavy work, as I used to, and can only eat a small amount of certain kinds of food. I have been doing some house-painting the past summer, and found it agreed with me pretty well, as I was out in the fresh air all of the time, which is what I like and need. I could not work in one of these "State's Prisons" of factories here, if I were to be paid five dollars a day. I would not last a month. I would not be able to eat anything. Still, no matter how bad off we may be, we can always find someone in a worse condition. Six years ago I was in a hospital for a time, and I thought I was pretty bad, but I could get outside and walk around a little, but I tell you, Uncle Charlie, I looked like some of the boys of the Civil War, who were in Andersonville Prison. Still, I thought I was fine, compared to some poor souls who were lying in bed there for months, unable to hardly move, and had to be cared for like infants by the good, kind, noble "Sisters," who were continually on the go, attending to some poor patient.

I sincerely sympathize with our poor shut-ins, and endeavor to send a little cheer to some of them when I can.

My father was a soldier during the Civil War, for a time at least; enlisted in the Third Wisconsin Infantry, June, 1861, and was wounded at Winchester, Va., May 25th, 1862, and sustained a fracture of the skull, a bullet having struck him about two inches from of Winchester. One of them ran into a dwelling and begged a woman to "save that poor, wounded as oldier for God's sake." She asked if he had a family, and upon being told he had a wife and four small children in Wisconsin, went out where the bullets were flying, and as my father was paralyzed and unable to move, caught him by the shoulders, and dragged him through the gate in the high board fence which enclosed her lot, while six or seven bullets pierced the gate before she had accomplished the act, and closed the gate. I wish I could meet that brave woman, or her daughter, who also helped to carry my father into the house, and wash the blood from his face and head. I she told him though, "If he had been from Massachusetts, she would not have saved him, and if he were General Banks, she would have knocked the rest of his brains out."

My father died from effects of the wound and other diseases contracted in the army, in Jan. 1900. We miss our dear ones when they're gone, and you may be sure I miss my father. I have a good many articles of his, which no money could buy. I have a pipehead one of the "boys" made from, I think, a laurel root, at Winchester Va., and a knife he brought from there—a pocket knife—has one large blade, which fastens open with a spring back, a top which he used when a boy. I have a gold dollar set in a ring, which dollar he received from "Uncle Sam" when he was discharged, in 1862.

My mother is living with me. She is seventy-five years of age, and is "keeping house" for me. I have two sisters in the city of Oshkosh, Wisconsin, and one in Vermont. Your nephew,

JOHN F. CANNON (9,763).

Bravo, John! you've written an exceedingly interesting letter, and that incident of the war.

Bravo, John! you've written an exceedingly interesting letter, and that incident of the war, where that brave woman saved your father, is one of the most dramatic, and sublimely heroic things I've ever heard of. It is a great pity (CONTINUED ON PAGE 9.)

Edua Barl witnesses a duel, and Harry Dent falls dead. The body is carried to the home of Aaron Hunt. Edua's grandfather. Edua goes to her grandfather's blacksmith shop, where he is shoeing a victous horse. The owner, impatient at the delay, curses her grandfather. Aaron Hunt dies suddenly, and for weeks Edua retains a vague remembrance of keen anguish. She decides to go to Columbus, Georgia, to work in the factory, and boards the train at Chattanooga. Night comes on and she is awakened by a succession of shrill sounds and all is chaos. Edua, severely injured, is carried to the home of Mrs. Murray, who will educate her, exacting certain things. St. Elmo, Mrs. Murray's son, comes home. Edua overhears his words of disapproval, and in his voice, recognizes the man who cursed her grandfather. She falls asleep in the garden. St. Elmo discovers a dangerous dog near her, and thunders for her to keep still. He seizes the dog and commands the girl to bring him a stick. She pleads for the dog and snatching the sidek from his hand refuses to give it back. St. Elmo is dumb with astonishment. He walks up and down his elegant rooms. On a slab is a miniature tomb, the richly carved door of which is opened only by a key, which never leaves St. Elmo's watch-chain.

Mrs. Murray secures Mr. Hammond as Edna's instructor and she begins the study of Latin and Greek. St. Elmo starts on a long journey. He intrusts the key to Edna's keeping on two conditions; first not to mention it to anyone, and that she will not open the tomb, unless he falls to return at the end of four years and she has good reason to consider him dead. She promises not to betray the trust. Gorden Leigh, a young man of wealth, studies with Edna, and together they begin Hebrew. "Edna, I shall never forgive you for not writing to me, telling me frankly of your failing health."

"Oh! scold me as much as you please. It is a luxury to hear your voice even in reproof."

"I knew mischief would come of this separation from me. You belong to me, and I mean to have my own, and take proper care of you in future. The idea of your working yourself to a skeleton for the amusement of those who care nothing about you is simply preposterous, and I intend to put an end to such nonsense."

"Mrs. Murray, why have you not mentioned Mr. Hammond? I almost dread to ask about him."

"Mrs. Murray, why have you not mentioned Mr. Hammond? I almost dread to ask about him."

"Because you do not deserve to hear from him. A grateful and affectionate pupil you have proved, to be sure. Oh, Edna! what has come over you, child? Are you so intoxicated with your triumphs that you utterly forget your old friends, who loved you when you were unknown to the world? At first I thought so. I believed that you were heartless, like all of your class, and completely wrapped up in ambitious schemes. But, my darling, I see I wronged you. Your poor white face reproaches me for my injustice, and I feel that success has not spoiled you; that you are still my little Edna—my sweet child—my daughter. Be quiet now, and listen to me, and try to keep that flutter out of your lips. Mr. Hammond is no worse than he has been for many months, but he is very feeble, and cannot live much longer. You know very well that he loves you tenderly, and he says he cannot dle in peace without seeing you once more. Every day, when I go over to the parsonage, his first question is, 'Ellen, is she coming'—have you heard from her?' I wish you could have seen him when St. Elmo was reading your book to him. It was the copy you sent; and when we read aloud the joint dedication to him and to myself, the old man wept, and asked for his glasses, and tried to read it, but could not. He—" girl into my house, how little I dreamed that I was sheltering unawares the angel who was to bring back happiness to my son's heart, and peace to my own!"

She lifted the burning face, and kissed the quivering lips repeatedly. "Edna, my brave darling! how could you resist St. Elmo's pleading? How could you tear yourself away from him? Was it because you feared that I would not willingly receive you as a daughter? Ioo not shiver so—answer me."

"Oh! do not ask me! Mrs. Murray spare me! This is a subject which I cannot discuss with you."

This is a subject which I cannot discuss with you."

"Why not, my child? Can you not trust the mother of the man you love?"

Edna unwound the arms that clasped her, and rising, walked away to the mantelplece. Leaning heavily against it, she stood for some time with her face averted, and beneath the veil of long, floating hair Mrs. Murray saw the slight figure sway to and fro, like a reed shaken by the breeze.

"Edna, I must talk to you about a matter which alone brought me to New York. My son's happiness is dearer to me than my life, and I have come to plead with you, for his sake, if not for your own, at least to—"

"It is useless! Do not mention his name again! Oh, Mrs. Murray! I am feeble today; spare me! Have mercy on my weakness!"

She put out her hand appealingly, but in your.

"One thing you must tell me. Why did you spare me! Have mercy on my weakness!"

She put out her hand appealingly, but in vain.

"One thing you must tell me. Why did you reject him?"

"Recause I could not respect his character. Oh! forgive me! You force me to say it—because I knew that he was unworthy of any woman's confidence and affection."

The mother's face flushed angrily, and she rose and threw her head back with the haughty defiance peculiar to her family.

"Edna Earl, how dare you speak to me in such terms of my own son? There is not a woman on the face of the broad earth who ought not to feel honored by his preference—who might not be proud of his hand. What right have you to pronounce him unworthy of trust? Answer me!"

"The right to judge him from his own account of his past life. The history which he gave me condemns him. His crimes make me shrink from him."

"Crimes? take care, Edna. You must be beside yourself! My son is no criminal. He was unfortunate and rash, but his impetuosity was certainly pardonable under the circumstances."

"All things are susceptible of palliation in a mother's partial eyes," answered the governess. "St. Elmo fought a duel, and afterward carried on several filtrations with women who were weak enough to allow themselves to be trified with: moreover, I shall not deny that at one period of his life he was lamentably dissipated; but all that happened long ago, before you knew him. How many young gentlemen indulge in the same things, and are never even reprimanded by society, much less denounced as criminals? The world sanctions duelling and firting, and you have no right to set your extremely rigid notions of propriety above the verdict of modern society. Custom justifies many things which you seem to hold in utter abhorrence. Take care that you do not find yourself playing the Pharisee on the street corners."

Mrs. Murray walked up and down the room twice, then came to the hearth.

abhorrence. Take care that you do not find yourself playing the Pharisee on the street corners."

Mirs. Murray walked up and down the room twice, then came to the hearth.

"Well, Edna, I am waiting to hear you."

"There is nothing that I can say which would not wound or displease you; therefore, dear Mrs. Murray, I must be silent."

"Retract the hasty words you uttered just now; they express more than you intended."

"I cannot! I meant all I said. Offences against God's law, which you consider pardonable—and which the world winks at and permits, and even defends—I regard as grievous sins. I believe that every man who kills another in a duel deserves the curse of Cain, and should be shunned as a murderer. My conscience assures me that a man who can deliberately seek to gain a woman's heart merely to gratify his vanity, or to wreak his hate by holding her up to scorn, or trifling with the love which he has won, is unprincipled, and should be ostracized by every true woman. Were you the mother of Murray and Annie Hammond, do you think you could so easily forgive their murderer?"

"Their father forgives and trusts my son, and you have no right to sit in 'judgment upon him. Do you suppose that you are holier than that white-haired saint whose crown of glory is waiting for him in heaven? Are you so much purer than Allan Hammond that you fear contamination from one to whom he cilings?"

"No—no—no! You wrong me. If you could know how humble is my estimate of myself, you would not taunt me so cruelly; you would contamination from one to whom he clings?"

"No—no—no! You wrong me. If you could know how humble is my estimate of myself, you would not taunt me so cruelly; you would only—pity me!"

The despairing agony in the orphan's voice touched Mrs. Murray's proud heart, and tears softened the indignant expression of her eyes, as she looked at the feeble form before her.

"Edna, my poor child, you must trust me. One thing I must know—I have a right to ask—do you not love my son? You need not blush to acknowledge it to me."

She waited awhile, but there was no reply, and softly her arm stole around the girl's waist.

"My daughter, you need not be ashamed of waist.

"My daughter, you need not be ashamed of your affection for St. Elmo."

Edna lifted her face from the mantel, and clasping her hands across her head, exclaimed:
"Do I love him? Oh! none but God can ever know how entirely my heart is his! I have struggled against his fascination—oh! indeed clasping her hands across her head, exclaimed:

"Do I love him? Oh! none but God can ever know how entirely my heart is his! I have struggled against his fascination—oh! indeed I have wrestled and prayed against it! But today—I do not deceive myself—I feel that I love him as I can never love any other human being. You are his mother, and you will pity me when I tell you that I fall asleep praying for him—that in my dreams I am with him once more—that the first thought on waking is still of him. What do you suppose it cost me to give him up? Oh! is it hard, think you, to live in the same world and yet never look on his face, never hear his voice? God only knows how hard! If he were dead, I could bear it better. But, ah! to live with this great sea of silence between us—a dreary, cold, mocking sea, crossed by no word, no whisper, filled only with slowly, sadly-sailing ghosts of precious memories! Yes, yes! despite all his unworthiness—despite the verdict of my judgment, and the upbraiding of my conscience—I love him! I love him! You can sympathize with me. Do not reproach me; pity me, oh! pity me in my feebleness!"

She put out her arms like a weary child and me in my feebleness!"

See first page illustration.

She put out her arms like a weary child and dropped her face on Mrs. Murray's shoulder.

"My child, if you had seen him the night before I left home, you could not have resisted any longer the promptings of your own heart. He told me all that had ever passed between you; how he had watched and tempted you; how devotedly he loved you; how he reverenced your purity of character; how your influence, your example, had first called him back to his early faith; and then he covered his face and said, 'Mother! mother! if God would only gigher to me, I could, I would be a bettar man!' Edna, I feel as if my son's 501 l'ested in your hands! If you throw nim off utterly, he may grow despoirate, and go back to his old habits of reckless dissipation and blasphemy; and if he should! oh! if he is lost at last, I will hold you accountable, and charge you before God with his destruction! Edna, beware! You have a strange power over him; you can make hear me! Hear a mother pleading for her son's eternal safety!"

The haughty woman fell on her knees before the orphan and wept, and Edna instantly knelt beside her and clung to her.

"I pray for him continually. My latest breath shall be a prayer for his salvation. His eternal welfare is almost as precious to me as my own; for if I get to heaven at last, do you suppose I could be happy even there without him? But, Mrs. Murray, I cannot be his wife. If he is indeed conscientiously striving to atone for his past life, he will be saved without my influence; and if his remoseful convictions of awould not accomplish it. Oh! of all mourrful lots in life, I think mine is the saddest! To find it impossible to tear my heart from a man whom I distrust, whom I cannot honor, whose fascination I dread. I know my duty in this matter—my conscience leaves me no room to doubt—and from the resolution which I made in sight of Annie's grave, I must not swerve. I have confessed to you how completely my love belongs to him, how fruitless are my efforts to forget him. I have told you what bitter suffering our separation costs me, that you may know how useless it is for you to urge me. Ah, if I can withstand the walling of my own lonely, aching heart, there is nothing else that can draw me from the past of day, you, no, no mother than the produced here in the bear my loneliness. He only can comfort and sustain me; and in lis own good time He will save Mr. Murray, and send preace into his trobled soul. Until then, let us pray patiently."

"HELP ME O MY GOD! IN THIS THE LAST HOUR OF MY TRIAL."

"HELP ME O MY GOD! IN THIS THE LAST HOUR OF MY TRIAL."

The mocking-bird sang as of old in the myrtle-boughs that shaded the study-window, and within the parsonage reigned the peaceful repose which seemed ever to rest like a benediction upon it. A ray of sunshine stealing through the myrtle leaves made golden ripples on the wall; a bright wood-fire blazed in the wide, deep, old-fashioned chimney; the white cat slept on the rug, with her pink paws turned toward the crackling flames; and blue and white hyacinths hung their fragrant bells over the gilded edge of the vases on the mantelpiece. Huldah sat on one side of the hearth peeling a red apple; and, snugly wrapped in his palm-leaf cashmere dressing-gown, Mr. Hammond rested in his cushioned easy-chair, with his head thrown far back, and his fingers clasping a large bunch of his favorite violets. His snowy hair drifted away from a face thin and pale, but serene and happy, and in his bright blue eyes there was a humorous twinkle, and on his lips a half-smothered smile, as he listened to the witticisms of his Scotch countrymen in "Noctes Ambrosiane."

Close to his chair sat Euna, reading aloud from the quaint and inimitable book he loved so well.

cisms of his Scotch countrymen in "Noctas Ambrosians."

Close to his chair sat Euna, reading aloud from the quaint and inimitable book he loved so well, and pausing now and then to explain some word which Huldah did not understand, or to watch for symptoms of weariness in the countenance of the invalid.

The three faces contrasted vividly in the ruddy glow of the fire. That of the little girl, round, rosy, red-lipped, dimpled, merry-eyed; the aged pastor's wrinkled cheeks and furrowed brow and streaming silver beard; and the carved-ivory features of the governess, borrowing no color from the soft folds of her rich crimson merino dress. As daylight ebbed, the ripple danced up to the ceiling and vanished, like the pricked bubble of a human hope; the mocking-bird hushed his vesper hymn; and Edna closed the book and replaced it on the shelf.

Huldah tied on her scarlet-lined hood, kissed her friends good by, and went back to Le Bocage: and the old man and the orphan sat looking ab (CONTINUED ON PACE IL.)

your father did not get that heroic soul's name, and you ought to have married the daughter, and have rounded out the story. I am sorry you are having such a time with your stomach. I have a great deal of trouble with mine. I have a dreadful time to get anything to put in it, and three or four hours after I have filled it up, the durned thing gets empty again. Seems to me there must be some fellow inside me who wines everything I dream into it. Meanth there have the stomach the story of swipes everything I drop into it. Maybe there is a hole in it. If there is, I wish I could plug it up, as that hole is a dreadful nuisance to me. it up, as that hole is a dreadful nulsance to me. I'm glad you've been a watchman, John, because I was a watchman myself once. I was engaged in a factory where they made opera glasses and spectacles for the blind. I slept all night, and in the morning when the folks came to work, I went all over the factory and collected four hundred watches. I addressed each of the employees thus: "You'll kindly hand me over your watch?" Then they looked at me suspiciously (most people do), and said. at me suspiciously (most people do), and said, "Give you my watch, what for?" Then I replied, "Because I am the watchman, and I've piled, "Because I am the watchman, and I've been appointed to keep watch, so give me your watch so I can keep it. That's the orders of the firm." That day I went home with four hundred watches, and then a piatoon of police fell through the door of my room, and grabbed me. "What are you doing with these watches?" said the Chief. "I'm the watchman, Chief," was my reply, "and my mother told me I was to keep good time, and I am trying to do what my mother told me, and I hope, Chief, you will always do as your mother told you." Then they took the watches away, and told me to watch out or I'd get into trouble. You speak, John, about not being able to make both ends meet. When you can't make both ends meat, make one meat, and the other vegetables, and meet. When you can't make both ends meat, make one meat, and the other vegetables, and you'll do very nicely. John Cannon! I've got a friend named John Gunn, and his son is a son of a Gunn. Now, John, I will tell you how to cure that stomach trouble of yours. Quit eating all solid food for a month, and live on milk Drink from two to three quests of milk milk. Drink from two to three quarts of milk a day, sip the milk slowly. This will give your stomach a chance to rest up, and get in good shape. Masticate your food thoroughly, and give it a rest, and you will have no stomach trouble.

Here we have a splendidly written letter, and a superb picture of army life from a military Missouri Cousin.

TAPT, Mo., Feb. 1, 1907. DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE AND COUSINS:
I was at Monterey, California at the time of the 'Frisco earthquake being a member of troop H, 14th U.S Cavalry.

'Frisco earthquake being a member of troop H, 14th U. S Cavalry.

The shock was felt very distinctly at that place, which is one hundred and twenty-five miles south of San Francisco. The earthquake occurred at 5.15 Wednesday morning, and the second squadron of the 14th Cavalry and eight companies of the 20th Infantry, received orders to proceed at once to San Francisco to preserve order, and aid in relieving the suffering, etc. We remained in San Francisco about two months after the calamity.

To those who have not had experience and are interested in Uncle Sam's "boys in blue," I will give a brief sketch of the life (or existence) of the Cavalry soldier, other branches of the service differing more or less.

Beginning at the recruiting office, the prospective applicant for enlistment feasts his eyes on the pictures of soldiers in gorgeous array, representing the different branches of the service, and whatever scruples he has entertained relative to enlisting.

scruples he has entertained relative to enlisting, here fade into oblivion, and as the old soldiers say, "he holds up his hand."
He then probably stays at a hotel a few days until a few more have followed his example, then he is sent with the others to a troop that is in need of a few more have followed his example, then he is sent with the others to a troop that is in need of men.

Here histroubles begin. No matter how intelligent he was in civil life, here he will hardly have enough sense to come in when it rains, and will almost invariably believe anything and everything that is told him by soldiers of longer service. I knew one man who was under the impression for some time that he must pay his board from his monthly salary, an amount which would not be sufficient to pay his board in hardly any boarding-house.

I think the initiation is conceded to be the most trying ordeal through which the recruit passes. This usually comes in the form of a blanket courtmartial administered by his comrades, just to show him their hearts are in the right place.

The recruit is brought up for trial before a selected jury, noted for their impartiality (?). Charges are preferred against him, of which he is found guilty. He is then sentenced to perform some task for the amusement of all present. Then comes the army blanket, around which several of the boys have gathered holding it from the ground. The recruit is unceremoniously tossed into the center. Then by all pulling and lifting at the same time, the well-frightened and breathless occupant of the blanket is thrown high in the air. He hardly ever alights on the blanket in the same position twice If he comes down head first, so much the worse for his head, but he don't stay there long enough to grieve about his error in landing. He is at liberty to change his position on the way up next time. You should hear him gasping for breath as he goes up and down, grasping alternately at the atmosphere and blanket.

Uncle Charlie, do you remember the gasping noise your girl made the first time you put your arm around her? Well, that's the way a recruit breathes when being thrown up in a blanket. I speak from experience. Now, don't understand me to say, I have bad my arm around your girl, for I have not. But I have been the center attraction in a blanket court car, trying to ascend to a horse's back by climbing his leg, or any other way his fancy dictates, is worth missing a train to see. Buthe soon learns to mount, not only at a "halt," but at a gallop as well. I think I have seen as good horseback riders in the U.S. Cavalry, as I have ever seen in circuses, but this is only accomplished by long and faithful practice.

Practice.

By dist of perseverance I learned in three years ceedingly partial to you boys in blue, for I think you do the State a service, the value of which is not properly appreciated, and I think your pay is much less than it ought to be. I would like to see an Army and Navy Union, and all of you go on a strike for more money. No money, no fight. It is an exceedingly foolish idea to think that soldiers are nothing but drunken wastrels. Once upon a time this may have been true, but it is true no longer. An exceedingly good class of men are now joining both Army and Navy, and the old hard drinkers are getting to be the exception. A lot of idiots who knew no more of Army life than a hog knows of astronomy, induced the government to abandon the Army canteen. This on the face of it looked like a good thing for the soldiers, but as a matter of fact it was the worse thing that could have happened to them. The thing that could have happened to them. The soldier wants his beer, and he is going to have it. The canteen was his club, and there he could sit and drink his beer, and smoke his pipe, and play games, read, and amuse himself as he saw fit, just as a rich man can do at his club. No hear awar awar to the soldier in the club. No harm ever came to the soldier in the canteen. He was right under the eye of the authorities, and a certain check can be kept on a man under such conditions. Besides, what he drank in the canteen was of good quality as such stuff goes. Once the canteen was closed the soldier was driven outside the barracks, right into the low-down poison shops, that couldn't have existed if the canteens had not been closed. Here the soldier is forced to go if he wants society, here the vilest poison is given him to drink, and here are the harpies and vampires that take his last dollar, and fill him with disease. What the idiots should have done was to do what has been done in England. Improve the canteens, put an air of refinement into them, discourage drinking of liquor in every way, by giving the soldier drinks that will not harm him. The trouble is, you can never get a bigot or a crank to look rationally at anything. The idiots who shut up the canteen thought that would keep the soldiers from drinking, but instead it drove them right out of barracks into the vilest of dens where the view of these poople stead it drove them right out of barracks into the vilest of dens where they are robbed and poisoned, so you see the aim of these people was not to encourage temperance, or improve the soldier's lot, but simply to say he shouldn't have his beer on government property, but he could go to the devil and swim in it, and poison himself outside if he wanted to. The very men who voted to close up the soldiers' club, have their own club where liquor flows in rivers, and where they can get bolled and stewed in alcohol to their hearts' content. What is sauce for the rich man's goose, you see, is not sauce for the fifteen-dollar-a-month soldier. The first principle dear to every American heart, a principle for which every man should be ready to shed his last drop of blood, is "Equal rights principle for which every man should be ready to shed his last drop of blood, is "Equal rights for all, special privileges for none?" If you shut up the soldiers' club or canteen, be consistent, and shut up the rich man's club, and shut up every saloon in the city as well, but force him from the canteen where he was reasonably safe, into the arms of harpies, thieves, vampires and professional polson sellers. The soldier is a man and a citizen. This letter shows the sort of men we have in the army—men who are a credit to any community. Summer before last a COMFORT cousin, who belonged to the U. S. Artillery was moved from his post in New Orleans to New York. A friend gave him my address, and regarding me as a real relative he looked me up, and dined with us, and frequently after came to see me. He did not drink, he had $600 in the bank, and was the equal socially and intellectually of any was the equal socially and intellectually of any canteen question, because it forced his comrades to seek recreation and society in saloons where they were forced to drink more than was good for them, instead of encouraging them to stay in their own barracks. There, I have tried to do our brave boys in blue justice, and few want to do them that, though they are ready to die for us, whenever that call comes, and all for $15 a month. $15 a month.

Clarence, you are wrong about my girl gasping when I put my arm around her. She didn't have the gasps, no siree, she had the gaps. Clarence is from Missouri, so some of you must show him a bad case of gaps.

Here is a letter that should touch every heart. 159 4th St., WYANDOTTE, MICH., Nov. 2, 1906.

By dint of perseverance I learned in three years' service to lead my horse to water unassisted. Which does well for anyone claiming Missouri as their home.

While the life of the regular soldier is not as strenuous at present as during the Civil War, they are by no means carried through on flowery beds of ease, and if they are loyal enough to leave friends and home and endure the dangers and hardships of the army for the meager compensation allowed them, I think there should be more respect for them, and less censure.

Having done nothing in or out of the army worthy of relating, I will suspend operations for the present.

Wishing you all great lumps of pleasure every day of the new year. I am your slightly demented but ever loving cousin.

Clarence, we are all deeply indebted to you, for your exceedingly interesting, and well-written letter. EDITH FISHLEIGH, (No. 15,576.)

I hope you will try and give this poor girl a wheel chair. She needs it badly. Wheel chairs are costly things, and it takes a good many dimes to buy one. Little Nellie Nichols our President of Wisconsin, who I am thankful to say has been healed of her troubles, and is now able to walk, has by her own unaided efforts raised sufficient money to buy five wheel chairs, and this while she was lying helpless. I don't think the whole League combined has done as well as this.

Edith Fishleigh has no one but her mother to care for her. She has creeping paralysis, and is a great sufferer. There is absolutely no help on a great sufferer. There is absolutely no help on earth for this poor girl. All I ask you to do is to send a flood of love, sympathy, sunshine, and cheer into her suffering life, and make her forget her misery for a while. Six millions of people can scatter a lot of sunshine if they get together and do it. Here is your chance, and I hope you will do her a lot of good, and may God bless you in the doing.

Comfort's League of Cousins

Comfort's League of Cousins

For the information of those who have not been regular readers of Comfort, and others who are becoming interested in the Cousins' League for the first time, and are ignorant of its aim and objects, the following facts will be of interest:

The League of Cousins was founded as a means of bringing the scattered members of Comfort's immense circle of readers into one big, happy family. Its aim is to promote a feeling of kinship and relationship among all readers. It was primarily started as a society for the juvenile members of Comfort's family, only, but those of more mature years clamored for admittance so persistently that it was deemed advisable to impose no age limit; thus all are eligible to admittance into our League provided they conform to its rules and are animated by the child spirit.

Though the older folks are admitted, the young folks will always be the first consideration, and Uncle Charlie will write his page with a view of entertaining our young people solely.

Those who wish to join our League can do so by subscribing to Comfort for one year or inducing some one else to subscribe, and sending us their subscription. No premiums will be given those sending in members for the League.

If you are already a subscriber you can join by renewing your subscribing, or subscribing a year ahead. You can have the membership card and button sent to yourself and the Comfort for one year, if you already take the paper. All who join the League will receive a button and a handsome certificate of membership, also Comfort for one year, and the privilege of having their names in the letter list.

How to become a full-fledged League manhar.

How to become a Member

How to become a Member

In order to become a full-fledged League member and procure a card and button, you must become a paid-in-advance Compont subscription department, for yourself, or renew your own subscriptions now. When you do this, send five cents extra, or twenty cents in all, and say that you wish to join Compont's League of Cousins.

The five cents additional pays your membership fee and for the League button and membership card engrossed with your own name and membership offers are hereby withdrawn and only those who strictly comply with our above offer will be admitted to membership. It costs but twenty cents to join the League, a League which promises to be the greatest society of young people on earth, Never in the world's history was so much given for so little. Never could twenty cents be invested to such advantage, and bring such splendid returns. Don't hesitate, join us at once and induce your friends to do likewise.

All those League members, who desire a list of the cousins residing in their several states, can secure the same by sending a stamped addressed envelope and five cents in stamps to Nellie Rutherford, 1442 Pacific St., Brooklya, N. Y., our grand secretary. Some of the lists contain hundreds of names, so our secretary must have some triffing remuneration as she is devoting the whole of her time to this work.

Amatite requires no attention of any kind during its entire existence. It contains in itself the elements of resistance to water and air. Instead of merely presenting a smooth surface to receive a coat of paint (which is then the real roof), Amatite has a protective mineral surface.

It needs no painting or coating of any kind. The mineral surface takes the place of that. No trouble, no expense, nothing to think about after the roof is down. Anyone

A Corner for Boys

By Uncle John

Try This Trick

Stoop down and grasp the tops of your shoes, one with each hand, and while in that position try to jump forward. You may be able to clear a few inches, but it has been said that no one can jump the length of their own foot unless they leave go their hold on the shoes. Another peculiar thing is that if you hold your fingers only a hair's breadth away from the shoetops you can easily do it.

Experiment

Place a few shots or grains of lead on a common playing card, and then BOYS, TRY THIS! hold it over a lighted lamp. To your surprise the lead will melt, but the card will not burn.

the lead will melt, but the card will not burn. It may be slightly charred at the edges, but under the lead it will be protected from the heat, because the lead is a good heat conductor, and will absorb it as fast as it is furnished by the lamp. Place a red-hot coal upon a piece of metal, which has been placed quite flat upon a stove lid or other flat metallic substance. The cloth will not burn, but if you take it up and place it on a piece of wood it will immediately take fire.

Meat Barrel

A good way to sweeten a barrel which has een used to hold meat or brine is to half fill it been used to hold meat or brine is to hair hil it with hay and then pour over same a gallon or so of boiling water. Allow it to remain until cool and by that time the hay will have absorbed all impurities and odor. After this wash thoroughly with water to which has been added a few drops of ammonia and your barrel will be as fresh as a brand-new one.

Collapsible House

It is very essential that the sleeping-house of chickens be sunned and aired. The house pictured here readily admits of that as may be easily seen. Briefly stated, the plan is as stated, the plan is as follows:

The s i des are hinged at the bottom, and may be laid flat on the ground; the roof is detachable, and may be taken off at will; it is cleated on the inside, and covered on top with tar paper, or tin. If fitted properly, it serves to keep the sides tight and snug, however, the sides must stand upright before the roof goes on, and to keep them in that position hooks and staples are provided at the upper righthand corners. Lack of space forbids further details, but we will gladly answer all questions. A house of this pattern will be absolutely free from disease and vermin.

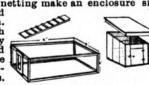

Percentage

Every boy wants to know how to figure the percentage of a ball team. The fractional method is the easiest and may be computed as follows: Form a fraction, using the number of games played for the denominator, and the number won for the numerator, then multiply by one thousand. For instance if a team played 18 games and won 6 your fraction would be 6-18 and this multiplied by 1000 gives us 333 which is the percentage of the team. You can verify this method by looking up the league standing in your newspaper.

Rabbit Coop

feet square and two feet high. Important both for the economy of lumber and neatness is the manner of join-ing at corners. The illustration makes it clearer makes it clearer than words could. Before tacking the wire on the outside we make the sleeping shed. This is built without framework; the side boards, presumably of four different widths, are nailed to the front and back. The roof is made in one piece, that is, cleated together so it can be lifted off like a lid. The floor is nailed onto the bottom from the outside by simply turning the shed upside down. Put a door on the front or high side and one on the back or low side also. makes it clearer high side and one on the back or low side also. When completed the shed is nailed into the corner of the cage and a runway is erected leading to the front door. Study the cuts and you will be able to make this coop without you will trouble.

A Nine Trick

More tricks can be done with the figure 9 than with any other digit. Suppose you wish to multiply 67583 by 9. Add a cipher to the large number and place the one to be divided under it and subtract it from the same. The result will be the product of 67583 multiplied by 9 thus 67583 subtracted from 675830 equals 608247. This method can be used with any number.

Small boys who like to imitate the Indian warrior of history, now have a chance to do so. Of course a bow and arrow is indispensable, but that is easily procurable.

Court House, which was an unusually fine build-Court House, which was an unusually fine building of red sandstone, and they were especially proud of their courtroom, a large oblong room decorated with mural paintings, the only paintings of their kind on the walls of any building in that section of the country.

This work had been executed by Thomas Warren, a young American, who had studied art abroad, but finally drifted back to his native land.

While abroad Warren acquired the drink land.

While abroad Warren acquired the drink habit. As long as work occupied his attention, he remained sober, but having finished and received the price of his labor, went on a long debauch, which finally ended in a fit of delirium tremens, from which he died. Thus shamefully ended the life of one who, had the demon drink not fastened upon him, might have risen to a place among the world's greatest artists. The mural paintings represented Grecian deities in groups of three, such as the Three Graces—beautiful women who stood as emblems of all the brightness, color and perfume of summer; the Three Fates—stern sisters upon whose spindle was spun the thread of every human life; the Three Hesperides in whose western garden golden apples grew; Three Harpies—mischievous meddlers; the Three Gorgon sisters with their terrible faces wreathed in snakes; and the Three Furies, whose mission it was to pursue criminals.

Above the judge's stand, and in strange contrast with all these heathen deities was a figure of the Christ on the cross, and beneath this in gilt letters those last sweet words of compassion:

"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

"Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

what they do."

This was the last picture Warren had painted.

The courtroom was packed with a curious crowd of spectators, for the young prosecuting attorney was known as an able and forceful speaker.

It was known that the Trust had forced a re-bate in freight rates, and it was known also that it had used that rebate as an instrument to that it had used that rebate as an instrument to kill competition, still no one expected Warfield would actually be able to prove this, at least not to a judge and jury already suborned.

First, there were a number of minor cases to be disposed of including a lot of "drunks," and as these sodden wretches lined up one by one each might have stood as a living tombstone bearing his separate inscription of:

"Here died Principle." "Here died Friendship." "Here died Family Ties." "Here died Love." "Here died Self-respect." "Here died Hope." "Here died Ambition." Each representing a grave dug by that old gravedigger—Hope," "Here died Ambition." Each representing a grave dug by that old gravedigger—Drink.

With the precision of clockwork the judge called out: "ten," "twenty," "thirty," "sixty," "ninety days" in the workhouse.

After these came a list of petty cases which were disposed of in short order. Then the Harvester Trust case was called and a buzz of excited interest swept through the room, but dwindled into a dull calm as it slowly dragged its way through the long day.

Judge Blodgett sat in his place among the spectators, and as the case proceeded his face gradually assumed a look of perplexity. That look was still there when he went home to dinner, as he asked himself the question: "Can it be because of anything I said to him the other day, or was it in his mind before, I wonder? I am an old man, alas! too old to be my brother's keeper, and I wish I had not spoken as I did."

some of its ruddy color.

Warfield was haggard, worn, as though he had not slept the previous night, and although he spoke with his usual forceful vigor there was a note missing—a note which the judge listened in vain to catch. Where now was that mountain of fact, that Ossa upon Pelion of evidence which Gene had piled up? Every bit of evidence which would tend to injure the Trust had been left out of his speech, and the result was only the dregs of oratorical

The judge was filled with sorrow.

"My God!" he groaned inwardly. "It's worse, a hundred times worse than being crushed. He has been bought!"

When the summing up closed the jury filed out, remaining out a short time; they rendered a verdict of not guilty.

Gene was leaving the room when he found himself confronted by a short, pudgy figure, surmounted by a round head in which shone the stern eyes as of an accusing angel.

"I congratulate you on your tremendous effort," said the judge. "That speech was a corker." The tone was ironic, and the judge kept both hands tucked clean down to the throat. Then, he tried to brazen it out by re-throat. Then, he tried to brazen it out by returning the judge's look but he could not, and his eyes grew vulpine and furtive as they drooped before that accusing glance. He could bear it no longer, and worried, haggard, he rushed away as if The Furies had broken loose from their places on the courtroom wall, and were pursuing after him.

Once in the shelter of his own room he threw himself on his bed fairly writhing under the consciousness of his load of guilt.

"The judge was right not to offer me his hand. Shall I ever, I wonder, be able to clasp the hand of an honest man again? All this long day I have felt every soul in the courtroom must know my shame, and must rise and point an accusing finger at me. Mother! mother! could you see your son now! Your words are coming home to me—I have sold myself into a bondage worse than that of slavery. Would that I could be again as on the day we parted! What have I done—what have I done—And Theta, my darling, you spoke the word that parted us before, but by this act of mine you are doubly lost to me now. Yet, never till this hour have I known how much I love you. Ah, little love, you were wise not to link your pure life with mine. I would have dragged you down to my level—I—a wretch so fallen I am not worthy even to kiss your little hand. You are lost to me forever! This thought is maddening—I am in hell—I burn—I burn!"

The minutes dragged into hours; night descended over the city; mothers sang their lullabies and little children cuddled down into the unconscious sleep of innocence, while Warfield's stormy soul struggled with its load of shame. At last driven almost insane by the tortures which his conscience inflicted, he sprang to his feet as the clock chimed out the hour of eight. A sudden thought!

"I will go to Victoria!"

The room was dark; as he turned on the light he laughed bitterly at the reflection of his haggard face in the mirror.

"I cannot go to her looking like this," he thought, "she would think me a ghost."

Bathing, he donned his most costly raiment

He had scarcely tasted food since the night be-fore, and feeling shaken the thought came to him to go in and take something to quiet his nerves. He laid down a coin, and called for brandy. The barkeeper recognized him, and looked astonished at seeing him there, for dur-ing his years in Excelsior Gene had fought the ing his years in Excelsior Gene had fought the liquor party with all his power. He raised the brandy to his lips, but the odor nauseated him, and he set it down untasted.

"That man must be crazy," remarked the bartender as he surveyed him curiously.

A blear-eyed old wreck who was leaning over the bar reached out an eager hand.

"Say, Boss, if the gent don't want it there ain't no call for liquor to be wasted; give it tuh me!" A burst of laughter greeted this appeal.

Victoria was playing a Chopin nocturne. At Warfield's entrance she arose and came forward, looking very beautiful in a white gown with creamy lace which veiled, but did not all conceal the snowy curves of her neck.

"I was wondering if I should see you tonight," she said extending her hand. Then she added: "I was sorry to learn of your losing your case today."

Gene failed to notice her hand as he looked at her with despair in his eyes.

"Would you still be sorry if I told you that I lost it—deliberately? I should probably have lost in any case, but still the result might not have been such a complete failure if I had put forth my best efforts. You may not wish to take my hand, Miss Moore, when I tell you that I have been bought." He turned away, gazing out into space.

He was back in his place again during the afternoon session, but it was not until the rebuttal and surrebuttal and the final summing up that the judge's look of perplexity changed to one of dread certainty.

The spectators were disappointed, and many left the courtroom. The prosecution had fallen flat.

As he listened to Gene's final argument the judge's face settled into grave lines and lost some of its ruddy color.

"Do you know," he went on huskily, "what you have done for me? You have given me back a portion of my self-respect—I no longer feel remorse—words are weak to express the gratitude I feel. I may have other dark hours—I have entered on a devious way, but," and a dark look came over his face, "I have crossed the Rubicon and there is no turning back for me now. Perhaps I shall again feel such remorse as I have felt tonight and a selfish wish is born within me to have you always there beside me to bring me comfort. Victoria, will you be my wife and share whatever Fate has in store for me?"

OAK stale bread in sweet milk, press out the milk as completely as possible, and feed the bread to the young poults. Be careful never to use sour milk, nor should the bread thus prepared, ever be fed after it has become sour. Feed this, a little at a time, every hour or two, for two days or more. Then add a little hard-boiled egg, shell and all, broken fine, to the soaked bread. After a day or two, follow with a ration of finely broken grain, and include a little finely cut meat. Make sure that the meat scrap is pure and sweet. Nothing is more injurious to the poults than tainted or infected meats of any kind, as it will disturb their bowels in a very few hours, and cause great trouble. Lean beef, well cooked, and cut into very small fragments, is good. Be very cautious about feeding green meat or bone. If any of this is fed, have it cut quite fine, giving but little at first, and be absolutely certain that it is fresh and sweet. Cooked meat is better for them while young.

Coarse sand is excellent for grit, and if sufficient of this is at hand, no other grit will be needed; but plenty of grit of some kind is a cient of this is at hand, no other grit will be needed; but plenty of grit of some kind is a necessity, for without it the poults cannot grind their food.

grind their food.

Food should be given them quite early in the morning, and at frequent intervals during the day. Never overfeed them, but use discretion in providing plentifully for their necessities. Give them all they will eat willingly, and no more. Avoid the use of rich foods, grains in hulls, and millet seed, which is not good for them while they are young. A little of this seed, however, may be fed as they grow older. Too much hard-boiled egg is bad for them, while a reasonable amount with bread is beneficial. An excess has a tendency to congest and clog the bowels, and the writer has seen poults die from the effects of a diet'exclusively of egg and millet seed. The same injurious effects may be produced by feeding entirely with fects may be produced by feeding entirely with of egg and millet seed. The same injurious effects may be produced by feeding entirely with milk curds.

Bowel trouble must be considered as an assured result of improper feeding, and may be aggravated by exposure to cold and dampness. Indigestion is a prime factor in the development of this ailment, that kills so many turkeys while young. This should be prevented, so far as possible, by the feeding of finely broken charcoal, which is a safeguard against fermentation in the crop or gizzard, thus aiding digestion. The looseness of the bowels should not be mistaken for cholera. It may usually be relieved by feeding rice that has been boiled almost dry in milk.

Too much stress cannot be laid upon the practice of hand-feeding. The turkey hens are not so attentive to their young as chicken hens. If all who grow turkeys would pay special attention to hand-feeding of the poults as soon as they are hatched, much benefit might be gained, To be successful with hand-feeding, one must take the food between the finger and thumb, patiently hold it to the beak of the young turkey, and try to induce it to eat. This method of feeding tames and quiets the young poults, gives them a good start, and prevents the possible contamination of the food by being thrown upon the ground. Although feeding in this manner may appear to involve considerable labor, the resulting benefits are often far in excess of the time and effort expended.

Too early laying is not desirable, for it has been proven that goslings do not thrive, that are hatched out before the young, tender grass is up in the spring. Feeding has so much influence on egg production, that it can be controlled during the cold weather, when the birds depend almost entirely on what you give them. From November to February 1st., feed enough to keep them in good health, but nothing more. After that date, increase the rations with a mash of cut clover hay, bran, or a little ground oats and corn, adding some bone meal, green bone, or beef scraps, two or three times a

Most breeds lay from ten to twenty eggs; then want to set. The first and second clutch of eggs are best stolen, and set under common hens. The last clutch, most breeders let the geese keep and hatch themselves. When a goose gets broody, remove her from the nest, shut her up in a coop large enough for her to stand upright in, but allowing little room for her to move about, place it where she can see stand upright in, but allowing inter from for her to move about, place it where she can see and hear her mates, and in a few days she will be ready to go out, soon starting to lay again. The shell and under skin of goose's eggs are thicker than those of hen's eggs, so care should be exercised not to let either get too dry. When set under hens, sprinkling the floor around the nest will aid in keeping the air moist. Many breeders sprinkle the eggs, or even dip them in water which is new-milk warm. When the goose herself does the incubating, there is no necessity to interfere, for her body gives forth a great amount of moist heat; furthermore, she will bathe every few days when off the nest to will bathe every few days when off the nest to feed, and so carry back much extra moisture in her feathers. Besides, geese always cover their eggs when off the nest, which prevents the air drying them. Incubation takes from twentyeight to thirty days.

A good feed for goslings is scalded, finely-cracked Indian corn, with a little Indian meal or bran mixed with it. It must not be made wet or sloppy, but just moist enough to crumble. Sharp, fine grit, slightly wetted, should be kept Sharp, fine grit, sightly wetted, should be kept in a pan where they can always get at it.

Goslings occasionally fall on their backs by accident when running, and cannot get up without assistance. The old goose seems to understand this, and will turn them over with her bill; but of course, a hen just leaves them alone, being used to the more nimble chicks, which can hop out of any hole. It is wise always to count young geese at feed times, when foster mothers are used, so that a search can be made for the missing one before it becomes for the missing one before it becomes

Provide some shelter against the heat of the noonday sun, or goslings will become sunstruck, which will cause death. They need as careful guarding from dew or sudden rain storms, for the baby down quickly becomes soaked with water which it cannot shake off; but as soon as the quill feathers have developed on their backs, they are safely out of danger from water, though not from damp quarters. The important points in successful raising of goslings are not to over-crowd when penned, protect from severe storms, excessive heat during the day, and damp floors at night. With attention to these points success is assured, for no class of domestic fowls is as hardy and free from disease. Provide some shelter against the heat of the

A. E. Y.—I have had over 300 incubator chicks hatched. The first hatched, seemed to sleep themselves to sleep at a week old. The second hatch commenced to die at a week old, and now there are not a hundred left. They are drawn on one side as if paralysis affected them. They have been carefully fed and kept clean. What is the matter?

A.—Rather difficult to say; should think the trouble has been caused during incubation. Did you turn the eggs? Was the temperature even all through the hatch? Try to recall any accident that happened, for that is where you will find the cause, and it will teach the remedy. I should like to hear from you again when you have thought it out.

M. A. K.—Will you tell me the cause of thinshelled eggs? Why do chickens head over when they try to walk?

A.—Not enough lime in the food. Give them plenty of crushed oyster shell, in a box, to eat as they like; if you can't get that, old mortar rubbish will do for them to peck at. Add clover hay to the morning mash, as it is strong in lime. (2) Should think a damp house had caused rheumatism. If the house is all right, I fear you have been feeding too much corn and fat-forming foods, which would cause both thin-shelled eggs and weakness in the legs. Cure—Feed no corn or meat, but wheat or hulled oats, very sparingly scattered in the straw or leaves, so that they will have to scratch for it. Add a heaping teaspoonful of sulphate of magnesia to every pint of drinking water twice a week; this will remove the layers of fat.

(2) Should think a damp house had caused rheumatism. If the house is all right, I fear you have been feeding too much corn and fat-forming foods, which would cause both thin-shelled eggs and weakness in the legs. Cure—Feed no corn or meat, but wheat or hulled oats, very sparingly scattered in the straw or leaves, so that they will have to scratch for it. Add a heaping teaspoonful of sulphate of magnesia to every pint of drinking water twice a week; this will remove the layers of fat.

A.—One quart each of the following ingredients: cracked corn, wheat, oats, millet, hemp, kaffir corn, sharp grit, charcoal, fine chopped clover hay, mixed thoroughly. (2) The best way to answer your question is to give the component parts of the gg, because food should supply them all.

For easy explanation, we will count the egg 1,000 grains for the shell, which contains about 50 grains of sait and lime; the remaining 50 consist of carbolic acid, water of crystalization.

The remaining 900 are divided about as under:

your talks about poultry a great help. Would you please tell me a few things? Which is the best kind of hen to keep for all purposes? (2) Is it possible to get chicks that will lay eggs that will hatch next year out of an incubator? I have been told that the eggs won't hatch.

A.—After trying almost all breeds, personally, I like the White Wyandottes best as an all-round market bird, but in justice I must own that Plymouth Rocks or Brahmas are as good. (2) Most decidedly you have been misinformed. An incubator hatches chicks that make good, strong hens, who will lay as many eggs as any others on the farm.

K. M. B.—I live fifteen miles from a post-office, in the mountains all alone, and would like to know if the lady who writes lives alone, or what help she has with the farm.

A.—Dear K. M. B. At the time I started and built up my farm I was practically alone, for my husband was compelled by business to be away all the first year. Later, when there were numbers of fowls to care for, I had a boy of fifteen to help.

J. Z.—Chickens are much troubled with lice.
A.—Keep the house clean. Mix kerosene oil in the whitewash. Use while hot all over the inside.
Paint the roosting poles with kerosene, and take dried catnip, tansy, featherfew; rub into a powder, and mix into one quart two ounces of pepper, and half the quantity of fine ashes.

C. C.—As there are on the market several brands of dry chick food, made up of different grains, etc., and as I live on a farm where we can grow any kind of grain or seed. I want you to give me a formula for same. (2) What constitutes a balanced ration of feed? What is the percentage each of protein, carbohydrates, and the ash or mineral element? Lime is an all important part of the properly balanced ration, because it is not only the carbonate of lime in the shell we need, but the phosphate of lime which should be contained in the white to make bone for the chick. H. V. H.—Will you tell me what is the cause of my hens' legs being rough and dirty looking? The scales make them twice their size. They seem well in all other ways.

A.—They have scaly legs, caused by a minute insect. This is contagious. Fill a lard pail with warm soapsuds, steep the birds' feet and legs for a few minutes, then scrub with a moderately soft brush; dry with a soft rag, and thoroughly rub with lard and sulphur mixed. Repeat thrice, at intervals of two days. This should cure. Paint the perches in the hens' house with kerosene oil to prevent it spreading.

I have three corner shelves in my room, one above the other that I keep my work-basket on, a little photograph box, and small odds and ends. I made one in the sitting-room high up out of the children's reach, for the medicine. Did any of you stop to think that a shelf about a foot from the floor, and one above that about the height of a table, and one between them, fixed in a corner, with a glass hung across the corner above that, and a curtain from the top shelf to the floor makes a cute dresser in a bedroom? Shoes can be set on the floor underneath, and the hat box too. A pocket on one side for stockings; a shoe box covered with pretty paper, set on top for handkerchiefs and ribbons. Take the lid of a shoe box and covered with tinfoil makes a pretty comb and brush tray, cover the top shelf with white oilcloth, the edge may be scalloped, or the curtain put on with a heading. A small shelf between the glass and the top shelf would be handy for a jewel box

I do enjoy reading those good sympathizing letters some poor shut-ins have written me, and told me how much worse off they are than myself. How thankful I am that I can walk on crutches when there are so many that can't even get out of a chair.

I have a nine-months-old little boy to look after this cold, windy weather, and three other children that are large enough to go to school. My oldest child is eight years old, and she does most of the bed-making every morning, and I don't hardly see how I am to get along without her while she is in school, but I think that all children ought to have a good education. If I can I want to educate my children, for that is all we will ever be able to give them.

If anyone has any embroidery silk, cotton or linen floss to spare I would appreciate the same, and return favor if possible.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

Crit Truman and his assistant, Ralph Dayton are called from New York to Chicago, by the Chief of Police to assist in suppressing crime. The leader is variously described, and one asserts he has a harelip. For a moment the men are silent, then the well-trained minds recall the recapture of "The Man with Many Aliases," Jim Hollis, Jim Holmes, Chris Dougherty, and the blow which splits him from the nostril to his mouth, and which, when healed, might pass for a harelip. "How is our work?" asks Crit. "Are the officials satisfied with the return of the money?" They ought to prosecute Percy Mandeville; he has the making of a confirmed criminal. There are several cases in their line. There's a missing girl and a jewelry robbery on Fifth Ave., but they can be left for a few days. Truman makes up his mind to catch this man who twice escapes, and he tells Ralph to wire the Police, get Peter, and we'll outline a general plan.

they can be left for a few days. Truman makes up his mind to catch this man who twice escapes, and he tells Ralph to wire the Police, get Peter, and we'll outline a general plan.

Percy Mandeville calls to see Sylvia Lyster; she tells him the call must be final. He insists she encourages him. She calls a servant to show him out. Sylvia, befriending Kathie Mandeville, confides to her that her husband makes a proposal of marriage to her. Sylvia still loves her husband. Custer Quex is engaged to Sylvia; he will go to her at night. It's the last happy afternoon he has for many a long day. While Crit and Ralph are on the way to Chicago, the former has a telegram. "Percy Mandeville disappeared. Think he went to Chicago. Took Sylvia Lyster with him," signed by the President of the bank. It's the girl, whose people wants Crit to look up. The Chief of Police tells Crit of a hold-up in a saloon, a month previous. Four guys, all masked, line the customers up—nothing is overlooked—even a pair of diamond cuff buttons is taken. As they emerge from City Hall they are joined by Peter, who is walting. He tells Truman, Jim Hollis swears if he gets free he'll never let you take him alive. The chief tells Truman of a crook, Christie Ferris, who has three or four names, although only twenty, who is in for "dipping." Truman "sweats" him and asks him, "Do you want to know who it was got you in here this last time?"

It's Jim Hollis. Christie will get even with him. Crit wants Christie to locate Jim Hollis. Ralph and Peter enter a saloon. They are attracted to a newcomer, who is the worse for liquor and well supplied with money. Ralph recognizes the man as Percy Mandeville. His companions are known as "Fake" Pete and "Snowflake" Mike. The trio seem worried. If the "old man" sees him this way he'll go out of business for a bit. The drunken man is not afraid of him or Jim Hollis either. Ralph and Peter strike a clue.

Custer Quex recuses to credit the rumor concerning Sylvia Lyster's disappearance with Percy Mandeville. The detectives n into the room, giving a gesture Raiph has seen before; there is instant confusion. Crit Truman in the guise of "Hung-eye" John enters, and fakes his escape from Joliet.

Custer Quex receives a letter from Sylvia Lyster. She loves him still, but from the moment he receives this letter she will be as the dead to him. The lover declares he will search the world until be finds her.

Crit Truman talks with the warden of Joliet penetentiary, and finding that "Hang-eye" John is serving sentence exacts a promise to keep outsiders from communicating with the warden for a few days. He conceals the disguise of "Hang-eye" John. Christic Ferris leads Truman into a trap. Without waiting to be caught he leaps out of danger. He assumes the disguise, and entering a saloon sees Christic Ferris, who drinks water. A crook who will keep from drinking brandy after putting a man, where he did me, is under Jim Hollis, Truman reasons. Ferris produces the hat Truman leaves. The barkeeper, utters a terrible oath. Truman follows Ferris and hears him tell "Four-time" Jim that he "dropped" Crit Truman. He hears the low cry and earnest pleading of a girl. She comes out. Crit Truman offers assistance and tells her to go to the number on the card. The girl hurries away and Crit slips back into the hall. He hears Jim Hollis order Ferris to tell "Pake" Pete and "Snow-flake" Mike to bring Mandeville there. Crit Truman hurries into the street. Raiph Dayton sees Crit Truman hurries into the street. Ralph obeys instructions, goes to Mrs. Haddam's and finds Sylvia Lyster. Her father is searching for her. She confides in Ralph. It is no ordinary runaway affair of a silly, lovesick girl. She is not Mr. Lyster's daughter. Not until a month before' does she know she is the daughter of a criminal and a poor woman who dies on Blackwell's Island. She is told her father is in trouble and needs her. Ralph interrupts her. He is kind. She is not Sylvia Lyster, but Helen Hollis. Has she seen the man before who claims to be her father, or Percy Mandeville? He is a thief, but she spares him for the sake of his wife. He wants to know why Jim Hollis has her here. So she can be trained for a thlef. A message is sent to Mr. Lyster, and the next train bears him and Custer Quex to Chicago.

CHAPTER XIII.

A BOLD ABDUCTION.

It is shirt to work. It is a thick when he man two as a desperate character. It was a case of her two best friends, the poor girl with the pleasant home of her hostess, and if there would be any objection to her walking up and down in front of the house. As it was still perfectly light, Mrs. Haddam replied that she thought it would do her good, and so, with her face velled to hidde the bruisses, the girl slipped out, and walked to and fro on Fifty-fifth street boulevard. It was her first visit to Chicago, and she was charmed by the beautiful roadway, with its double street, divided by the tree-dotted strip of green grass. One by one the boulevard lamps were lighted, and watching them, she forgot to turn when she came to the end of the block, and crossed the street. Various automobiles were dashing by, and she paid no attention to them, or in reality to anything except the beauty and novelty of the scene, when suddenly she felt a cruel grip on her shoulder, then a hand, none too clean was pressed against her mouth, and before she could make a movement, she was tossed into a waiting auto, and whiled a way.

For the first time in her vigorous young life, the girl fainted, but soon the motion of the car revived her, and she looked up into the hateful face of the man she had been told was her father.

"Well?" he asked.

"How dared you?" she cried, struggling.

"Why, my dear," the Man with Many Aliases said in as gentle a tone as he could command. "when you were lost this morning, I was naturally frightened. I sent some of my boys to look for you, and finally we discovered someone who had seen you come out this way. Another of our friends had seen you go into the Haddam house, and so we watched. When you came out, I was all ready. Now my dear, I hope you have come to your senses and will consent to nelp your father in his work. If you can give any pointers, we will pay a visit to this Mrs. Haddam, after dark, and see if we cannot give her something for a keepsake that will make her understand that we do not want any more of her settlement work."

"Do you mean you want me to tell you anything about Mrs. Haddam's house?" the girl asked coldly.

"To be sure. I think your dodge is a good one. You play the misused girl, get into these houses, and then pipe things off to us. A fine didea."

"It might be for you if I had any notion of given you any inference."

one. You play the misused girl, get into these houses, and then pipe things off to us. A fine idea."

"It might be for you if I had any notion of giving you any information," are girl returned angrily, "but I'd rather be pounded into a jelly than betray one who befriended me, even if I were willing to do anything so wicked."

"Still holding out against your old father?" Hollis asked reproachfully.

"I do not believe you are my father," she said decidedly.

The man looked at her narrowly. He did not know for sure if Crit had had any hand in her disappearance, but now he felt sure. Prior to her escape she had wept and bemoaned her fate, but had never doubted her paternity.

"Well I can't do more than show you the proofs," he said suilenly.

"They may be forged." she replied quickly.

The man shrunk back, and there was a very ugly sound in his voice as he threatened:

"Say that again and I'll brain you!"

"Oh no you won't," she returned with courage.
"I think that, and so does Crit Truman," she said triumphantly.

"Then Crit Truman sent you to this woman?" he asked in a dangerous voice.

"Yes he did," she returned.

"I suppose you think he is going to help you some more?"

"Yes I do."

"Suppose I tell you that Crit Truman will never help you or anyone again, that he had left.

"Suppose I tell you that Crit Truman will never help you or anyone again, that he had left this world by a quick route, either up or down?" "Dead?"

this world by a quick route, either up or down?"

"Dead?"

The man nodded.

"You murdered him?"

"Watch out, girl. You are using some pretty dangerous words. He was helped a little, perhaps, then again it may have just been an accident, I can't say, but he will never again hinder or help me or you."

"Then I tell you who will!" she cried, forgetting discretion, in her wild desire to frighten this man, of whom she stood in such dread.

"Who?" he asked with a sneer.

The automobile had sped along Fifty-fifth street boulevard until it emerged on Garfield boulevard, and from there was now twing in and out about the Ghetto. "Le lights were all lighted and by them this girl could see the curious signs, in every language except English. It frightened her to be among those who did not speak her own language, in company with such a man.

"Who is it that is going to rescue this fine beauty? Not your adopted father, who is tired enough, and disgusted at what he considers your ingratitude. Not the fine young man you had nearly captured, for he and your adopted father both believe you came here to Chicago with Percy Mandeville. Now who is it, tell me?"

with Percy Mandeville. Now who is it, tell me?"

"One of Crit Truman's assistants, Ralph Dayton," she returned.
Hollis gave an evil laugh:

"My beauty, you'll be worth a cool million for you can be pumped dry. Can't : u see that is just what I have been wanting to know, whether Truman came alone, or brought his boys with him. I couldn't find out, but now I'm wise, thanks to you," then not heeding her cry of terror, he continued:

"I must blindfold you, give me your hand-kerchief, Ferris," to the driver of the car, and before she could help herself, the girl was blindfolded, her mouth covered with a hard pressing hand, and she was carried bodily into a hall reeking with unsavory odors, and teeming with noise.

CHAPTER XIV.

IN WHICH HAPPEN MANY THINGS.

The great detective had faced many perils, and endangered his life more times than it is possible to estimate, but perhaps he was never in a more precarious situation than when he faced The Man with Many Aliases, Jim Hollis, as he glared at him through the steam of the Turkish bathroom.

"You sneak!" Jim finally hissed through clenched teeth.

Crit smiled and reminded him:

"Names are cheap, Jim."

tective offered no opposition. He knew there was no use, and he did not want to exhaust his strength in any way he could avoid.

"I'm not dead yet." Crit warned.

"About the same thing. Now we will gag you, and then leave you to the contemplation of your many wonderful escapes, while we prepare for our work tonight. Oh, you can have a delightful time, for you, if you are alive that long, can know just where we will be about nine this evening. I disclosed my plans pretty fully, when I thought you were straight goods, and as you are out of the way, I do not think I will make any change."

"Excuse me," Crit said with severe irony, "but you made a slight mistake. I could not have been straight goods when you thought me a crook."

Jim Hollis looked at Crit with astonishment,

Jim Hollis looked at Crit with astonishment, his mouth wide open. He could not comprehend how a man could jest with death before him, on the word of the could not comprehend how a man could jest with death before him, on the could jest with death before him, on the could not comprehend how a man could jest with death before him, on the could not any of us would do if you went insune."

Jim Hollis gave a cry of rage, and with his open hand struck Crit across the face.

The blood flamed into the detective's cheeks at the insult, but he simply smiled as he said:

"It is only cowards who hit women and bound men. If my arms were free, I do not think you would try such a thing. You know well enough how I repay such things as this," and he looked significantly at the wound on the man's upper lip.

The crook was beyond speech, but with no gentle hand he thrust a bundle of unsavory rags into Crit's mouth, and tied the gag securely as his men had the detective's arms and ankles.

He surveyed his work, and then with a mocking laugh, went to the steam generator, and turned on all the coks.

"Hurry up boys," he said, "skiddoo, and leave our 'famous detective' to study out another of his marvelous escapes, beak a good word for me, man, when out get a beak a good word for me, man, when out get a beak a good word for me, man, when out get a beak a good word for me, man, when out get a beak a good word for me, man, when out get a beak of the detective were not happy ones as he lay on a high table where his captors had placed him, panting in the steam, which was horribly dense. "I'm in a pretty bad fix, when I can't feel t...s," he thought, his eyes wandering about the room.

Suddenly a thought came to him, and he smiled grimly to himself:

"Strange about these crooks. They do not stop at taking human life, and yet they do not like to stay and see the end. The boldest criminal is at heart a coward. These men can coop me up here, but not one had the courage to tackle me openly and finish me off hand, when some hide-in-the-corner plan would do the work."

This seemed to give him strength, for he suddenly felt a new interest. While fearfully weak, he did not appear to be sweating so terribly.

weak, he did not appear to be sweating so terribly.
"I wonder if there is any end to the steam," he thought, and tried to penetrate the thick clouds. Suddenly his heart seemed to leap within his breast, for a chair hidden a moment before, was gradually appearing out of the steam-laden atmosphere.
"Something has happened to the ateam," he thought gratefully, and lay quite still watching the gradual clearing of the room.

burned up into three-cornered shape. Whatever the shape of the frame, it must first be covered plainly with thin muslin. If the flat shape is used, face the underside of brim with shirred muslin or with narrow ruffles of muslin or lace. Pale blue or pink is particularly pretty for the facing—in which take use the same shade of ribbon for the trimming. After the frame has been covered and the facing point in, the top of the hat is covered. This covering consists of two pieces, the crown and the brim. If you are going to make your own design, measure your frame and cut a piece of linen of same shape the property of the same and cut a piece of linen of same shape. Then take a button about three fourths of an inch across and lay it within an inch of the edge of linen, and mark with a pencil half way around button, making a deep scallop. After going all the way around, shove the button up a little and mark around it, to make the top edge of scallop (see illustration, Fig. 1.) It is necessary to leave a margin of at least an inch, so you can keep a firm hold of the linen while embroidering the scallop. If a smaller or larger scallop is desired, use something that will make it just the size you desire—a spool for a larger or the unsharpened end of a pencil for a smaller scallop. If a smaller or larger scallop is desired, use something the scallop, make a senough embroider, make a cough and falls somewhat over it, and the trimming usually cover a circle about twelve inches in diameter and will be all that is more elaborate.

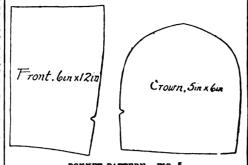

To embroider the dots, work them all one way across, which is for padding; then work them all the other way across, drawing the flows a light as more elaborate.

bows or flowers can be tacked on to match the particular gown worn. One usually can wear a linen embroidered hat a whole season without laundering—but if it gets wet, or spattered with mud, or is really soiled from wear, then of course it must be ripped from the frame, washed and ironed, and then put back. When this is necessary, trim with black velvet ribbon or with something entirely different from that used at first, and it will really be a new hat.

black velvet ribbon or with something entirely dirferent from that used at first, and it will really be a new hat.

If one can have several of these linen embroidered hats, it is well to have one in a deep tan-colored linen; faced with fulled rows of deep ecru lace, and trimmed with two or three shades of brown ribbon twisted together, they are stunning, and are equally suitable to wear with tan or brown cloth gowns, as with washable gowns. If one wears light blue a good deal, a blue linen embroidered hat is very becoming.

When making a Lingerie hat over a Continental shape, the linen is placed smoothly onto the turned-up brim and tacked securely around the top edge, the scallop standing up above frame. Then the other edge is fastened inside headhole. The embroidered crown is laid smoothly on to crown of frame, and the edges are tucked down between crown and turned-up brim added. This shape seems to hold in place longer than the wide-brimmed, floppy shape, but is not so becoming to everyone as the soft, wavy, broad brim. Our illustration, Fig. 2, shows the latter shape, made of several rows of wide lace put on rather full, on brim and crown, and having loops and bands of black velvet ribbon.

eral rows of wide lace put on rather full, on brim and crown, and having loops and bands of black velvet ribbon.

The same general style is used for misses as for grown-ups, in Lingeric hats, but there is quite a rage for making them in delicate colors, as pink or blue. Muslin, or mull, is generally used, instead of linen, and rows of narrow knife plaitings are used for the whole hat, crown and top and under brim. Often strings of the same material, four inches wide, are used, the ends trimmed with a row of the plaiting, but children dislike strings and are more comfortable with an elastic band. An old muslin dress, dotted or plain, which is worthless for anything else, makes a lovely hat, as ruffles may be made and practically no wear comes on the muslin, it comes more on the frame, so the muslin will wear at least one season. Cut in strips three inches wide, sew together and hem one edge; plait in fine knife plaiting, allowing three times as much muslin when straight, as you will need when plaited. Dampen and press on the wrong side; take out bastings, all except the running at the top, or raw edge, of plaiting. Sew onto top of brim first, allowing the first row to stand out an inch beyond edge of frame—which has, of course, previously been covered plainly with muslin, top and under. Let second row lap enough to cover raw edge of first row, and proceed until the entire top of brim is covered. Do exactly the same on under side of brim, be in g careful that stitches do not show on top. Then cover crown in the same way—around outer edge first, work-ing taward the center

When scallop and dot (or eyelet), on brim have all been worked, lay it wrong side up on an iron ing board, on two or three folds of something soft, like a blanket or thick flanne; lay a clean, wet cloth over it and press with a hot flatiron; then lay a dry cloth on, in place of the wet one, and press until perfectly dry and smooth. Each dot and scallop will stand out firm and perfect; then cut out linen around scallop, as closely as possible without cutting embroidery.

Do exactly the same for under still double box-plated ruche of same material, around crown, and tacking there. with an embroidered piece turning back—which is very pretty for a child two or three years old, as at that age the cap is big enough to admit of considerable embroidery. Illustration, Fig. 4, shows one of these bonnets for a tiny baby—its first bonnet. It is made of fine muslin with narrow tucks. Ilustration, Fig. 5, shows the style of pattern used. The back piece measures six by five inches, and the piece going around the head, one half only of which is shown in cut, twelve by six inches, after it is tucked. These measurements are of course, only general, as each baby's head varies, but these measurements are large enough, and the bonnet can be loosely basted together and fitted, and so get an exact fit before finishing. If bonnet is not to be lined, bind seams inside with an inch-wide bind-strip of same material—or else with taffeta bind-ing—so they will not irritate the head. The strings should be three inches wide and as long as desired—hemmed narrowly on each edge and broadly at the bottom, with a few narrow tucks above hem. It is a good idea to put the bow and ends at one bide of cap, tacking it there, with an eye underneath; then on the other side sew a piece of quarter-inch, flat, white elastic, making it just long enough to go straight across, when cap is on, from one side to the other. Sew a small, white hook to the end that is tog ounder bow. By doing this, one keeps the bow fresh and unwrinkled, and it is far enough to one side to be away from the baby's mouth; then, too, it is much easier to slip a hook into an eye than to have to tie a bow of muslin strings, particularly when the baby is restless.

During the warm weather bables wear the Pique washable hats, instead of bonnets, as they are much cooler and also afford a small amount of shade to the eyes. These hats are used between the bonnet and straw hat periods. Illustration, Fig. 6, shows one of these Pique hats. The crown but tons onto the brim, so that washing them is a simple matter. Top and brim are made double, to hold the starch. A circle

Now for a few suggestions on spring millinery for ladies.

The same shapes, in general, as we have had for the past year, are in evidence—so that last year's hats may be freshened up and worn again without being, in the least, back numbers. The mushroom shape, which was so popular last summer, continues in its popularity—and while it is not a specially pretty shape, it is becoming to most faces. Our illustration, Fig. 7, shows one in tan-colored straw with a row of dark red roses and glossy green foliage around the crown, and a cluster of the same under the brim at the left. A pair of dark green wings stand up smartly at the left, giving the hat the correct height, and the high bandeau tips it at the right angle. This is a good, all-around, summer model, being of colors that harmonize with all colors of gowns, and there is nothing about it that will fade quickly or get out of shape.

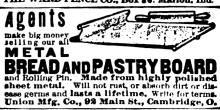

While large hats still hold their own, the medium sizes seem to be more in evidence for early wear. The narrow brim sailor is very popular, rather plain on top, as to trimming, but elaborately trimmed under the brim, where a wide bandeau rsises it to such a height that it takes quantities of trimming to fill in. This trimming usually has a foundation of tulle, which is soft and becoming close to the face, and then is piled with flowers, or feathers that fall down onto the hair, or a combination of both.

A Living Memento

By Constance Beatrice Willard

Copyright, 1907, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher. Inc.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTER.

"I want you to see everything, all the crude impossibilities, and the still cruder possibilities of my future." The man's life seems to hang upon the verdict of the girl by his side. Her fair face flames, and she manages to reply, "It's very interesting." The man wants her to think it is something more than that. Will he explain so she may understand perfectly. All about here is the land I own. It belonged to my grandfather, who owned slaves. Before the war, seeing what was coming, he sells them, investing the money in Northern securities. His father marries a lovely daughter of one of the families rained by the war. The first thing he remembers his mother teaches him year by year what she considers his duty toward the descendants of them who help make his fortune, and he points to a group of three children, pitiful reminders of an accursed past. It's a grand conception, but can he carry it out. "Would he be any better if he had sprung from despised stock," he asks. "He cannot change their color," Violet ventures to say. He does not seek to do that, or to encourage social equality, but he wants to give them something desired—a living chance. Violet smiles at her lover's earnestness. His father was very much imbued with the idea, and it was my mother's life, and when I was born they gave me the singular mame "Memento." To the world he is Toto or M. L. Griffith. Will she call him by his name and wear it? He knows he's asking a great deal; his work becomes a part of his life—and as he tells of his love he says he cannot go to her unfettered. The old town has fallen into decay. He will tear down the shanties and replace them with neat attractive cottages. He will develop the natural resources of the woods. Where a Revolutionary grand-father is killed he will erect a monument in the form of a public library. Over there a post-office, around the corner the city hall and theater. Still Violet is silien. It is beautiful, but for the man of talent, capable of shining in political and social life, it is too great a sacri

CHAPTER II.

MAY IT NEVER BE A FETTER.

HEN that house of ours is finished, we can fill it with any amount of company, and then, too, we need not spend all our time here. Europe has many treasures to show us, other lands will give us much, but our home will be here, and here we will restore the rights of humanity to those whose forbears were slaves to mine."

"But you cannot hope to develop all those industries by the negro labor, can you?" she asked, a hopelessness coming over her, but she was aroused by his ringing young voice replying:

"No, dear one, for my grandfather had other slaves besides black ones. In his various industries were men and women who toiled unceasingly, for starvation wages, and to them and their descendants, I intend to offer a refuge. At any rate way, but here is weather. them and their descendants, I intend to offer a refuge. At any rate my plan is worth trying. My fortune is so large and this land so fertile that I cannot lose much, an I will gain much peace and concentmen.," and a strange light glowed in his eyes.

"And if I tell you that I cannot enter into your beautiful ideas, that I am only an ordinary girl without much ambition, will it have any influence upon you, Memento?" she asked softly.

any influence upon you, Memento?" she asked softly.

An expression of pain came upon the exalted young face, but he said with a resolute squaring of the jaw:

"You will break my heart, if you decide you cannot live my life with me, but you cannot change my purpose."

"My dear," she pleaded.

"No, although my love is strong as death, there is something stronger still, my ser is of duty. I was not named Memento for nothing.

there is something stronger still, my ser a of duty. I was not named Memento for nothing.

"Violet, dear love, there is plenty of devotion in my heart for both you and my purpose. Most men have something which divides their interests between their wives and it. A man who has no purpose in life aside from a woman's love, is not worth the name. I am too wealthy to care to increase my wealth. I have no real leaning toward any profession, and I cannot either write or sing. Art is almost a closed book to me, except in a crude sort of fashion, and unless I had this purpose. I would not be happy even with you.

"Some men might have married you, and then let you find this out afterwards, but you are too dear for such treatment. I love you with all my heart and soul. I have never cared for another woman, and I do not think I ever can, even if you refuse me, for my love is very deep."

Violet gave a quick sigh, but could say nothing. She knew she loved him tenderly, devotedly, but she still feared.

"Sweetheart, look about you and see if this does not appeal to you. Here is a land blessed with wonderful natural resources.

"Then consider me now as being in the same position," he cried anxiously.
Suddenly as before, she threw out her hands,

Suddenly as before, she threw out her hands, saying almost angrily:

"Wait, wait! Let me collect my thought. What a pretty lane!"

"Yes, it is the historic Lovers' Lane, in which all my forbears have become engaged," he returned, and the blood surged to her fa, as she saw him turn from it, and drive along a less romantic avenue, which evidently led to some house.

Never before had Violet faced such a question. She had no doubt of her love, or his either, but she did fear that this plan of his might absorb his interest, leaving her stranded might absorb his interest, leaving her stranded outside of his deepest feelings. She was just out of school, and knew but little of the world, but enough to know that this was no ordinary man.

"Why have you waited so long?" she asked, knowing that it was five years since the death of his grandfather, when he had inherited the latter's immense fortune.

"It was a provision of the will. Grand-

"I have talked so much of my duty and so little of my love, that perhaps my little flower, you think I do not feel for anything but the oppressed. I wish you could know how I have loved you ever since that first day when I saw you, such a delightful study in green velvet and sable, which set off that beautiful hair of yours. I saw you standing there at the reception, the most wonderful I ever attended, for there I met you, and suddenly a sweet, ravishing wave of perfume, violet loaded, swept upon my senses. I did not need to be told that it came from you, and when I learned your name was Violet, I felt such a satisfaction, that my heart fairly ached with joy."

Was there ever such a wooing? The low, passionate words, the song of birds, the melancholy moan of the wind in the pines, falling upon an air heavy with fragrant blossoms.

Violet felt her head turning, and tried to keep her brain clear, for she knew that within the next hour she must decide their destinies.

"I think I will tell you what I said to myself, little sweetheart, as I gazed upon you when you left the room. I looked at you with my heart in my eyes, and whispered:

"And then you sit here and tell me that unless I agree to all your plans for the future, you will let me go, after you have stolen my heart?" Violet cried, sobbing in the intensity of feeling.

of feeling.

An expression of real happiness, deep and complete came into his face as to almost glorify it, as he returned gently:

"Darling if you fail to come up to my ideal, you are not my Violet," then as they turned abruptly, he pointed to a bare, weatherbeaten house which seemed to have sprung from the ground.

"That is all, dear, that is left of my old home. It is a fair sample of what my life will be without you. As his lips sealed her words, she gave a little start, crying:

As his lips sealed her words, she gave a little start, crying:

"Oh, right at the start, darling, you have gone back on traditions, for the others plighted their love in Lovers' Lane."

Memento Griffith gave a hearty, joyous laugh, as he almost shouted with joy:

"Look about you dear," and she saw that they were in the upper and of this old lane.

Then before she could even express her satisfaction, the young man sliped a ring from his finger, whispering as he slipped it on hers:

"With this ring the eldest in the family has bound his love to him, as I do you, my darling, and may it never be a fetter any more than my plans, for they, like their projector must always be guided by the hand that wears the Memento ring," and looking at it, Violet saw that it was composed of two priceless diamonds, set in two hearts of richly chased gold, welded together by a bar of pigeon-blood rubies.

"My Mementos," she whispered, pressing the ring to her lips, then raising them to his.

Comfort's Recitation Club

HIS month I must cut my letter to you a little short, in order to make room for the three recitations given. In answer to repeated requests two of them are for children. But before going farther, just a word about gesture, "the silent language of the soul." If you study those around you, you will find that speech, no matter how swift and impetuous, always follows, never precedes, gesture. A start, a tremor through the body, a convulsive movement of the hands, the expression of the face,—these signs and many others betray emotion before the voice has time for utterance. This is a rule you will do well to remember in studying your selections. It also enables your audience to follow you more quickly and intelligently.

"And thought leaped out to wed with thought Ere thought itself could wed with speech."

COUSIN HAL.

An Easter-tide Deliverance

The sun was drowned in the western tide,
The moon shone pale on the mountainside;
The heathen host, by the campfire's light,
In feast and revels passed the night.
They talked of deeds that should be done
At early dawn of the morrow's sun;
They laughed in scorn that the Christian band
Their mighty host should dare withstand.

The Christians prayed thro' the whole night long, Their arms were weak, their faith was strong. Close pressed the foe on every side, But heaven above was fair and wide. The sun that sank in the blood-red sea, An earthly type of their fate might be. The moon that shone with so cold a light In vain might seek them another night.

But Christ, their leader, would faithful be, And death in His cause is victory. Hours passed—one ray of morning light Was on the topmost mountain height. On a lofty crag, sublime and high, A form stood forth 'gainst the glowing sky. The Saint Germanus!—He turned his eyes Where Easter sun began to rise.

No word of sorrow his lips let fall, No word of dangers around them all. He bared to heaven his reverent head, For Christ this morn arose from the dead. Then "Alleluia!" aloud he cried, And "Alleluia!" the rocks replied; And "Alleluia!" from cliff to cave, An answering shout the Christians gave.

The echoes sound it again and again,
Like the voice of a host of mighty men.
The heathen start with strange, vague fear,
"What unseen foes have drawn so near?
Hath the God of the Christians sent in the night
His band of angels to join in the fight?"
Then wild with terror they fied away—
The battle was won that Easter Day.

Is life so hopeless, brother, to thee,
That naught but death can bring victory?
Rise thou above thine own despair,
Forget thyself and thy pressing care;
Let the voice of praise from thy lips arise,
Thine Alleluia mount to the skies;
And, on thy heart's glad Easter Day,
Thy foes, in terror, shall fly away.

—Maria H. Bulfinch.

As you study this selection you will notice the direct contrast shown in the first two stanzas—between the opposing armies, the one strong in numbers, the other strong in faith, with the courage and will to battle for the right. This contrast should be brought out clearly. You can do this only by those subtle little shadings of manner, voice and expression, which are so hard to describe, especially as they will vary with each individul. The manner of the heathen is boastful and self-confident, and they have only scorn and ridicule for the little band who have dared to withstand them. Fig. 47 shows a good pose for last two lines in the first stanza. The other gestures are indicating. Indicate the Heathen army to the left, the Christians to the right. In the second stanza the manner is subdued and fourth lines carefully for the half hidden meaning here. In the third stanza indicate the "ray of morning light," the "lofty crag," and "Saint Germanus" to the right-front and high up, but a good distance away, as you would if pointing to a mountain in that direction. The delivery of this, and the first half of the next stanza is quiet, earnest, narrative style. Fig. 48 shows you the pose for the first "Alleluia!" If you do not know the exact meaning of this word, or of any word when studying a selection, look it up before going on. "Alleluia!" should be spoken loudly, clearly, and with joy and exultation; pronounced slowly giving each vowel its full vale. The second is an echo, and should start strong and clear, and the vowel sound at the end should be prolonged and allowed to die the second is an echo, and should start strong and clear, and the vowel sound at the end should be prolonged and allowed to die away gradually. This is difficult, and will need much practice. I FIG. 48. "ALLE-spoke of this at length in a LUIA!" ALOUD HE previous lesson, mentioning the striking of bells or of a clock. In the present case your voice would not need to sound metallic. With this and the third "Alleluis!" you could bend the head as though listening. The last one is given strong and ringing and then allowed to die away. The fifth stanza has more dramatic force. Let the tones be round, strong and full in the first two lines. Show the Heathens' start of wonder and fear. I think I would emphasize the word "Hath" as well as "God" and "Christians." Make a pause between "away" and the last line, which you should deliver slowly and emphatically.

The last stanza is directed to each individual in the audience. The manner should be at once appealing and persuasive.

Little Perry's Awful Threat

I won't ever live in this house no more,
And I'm goin' away, 'way off somewhere
In the dark woods! And mebbe a bear
Or something nobody ever saw before Might come and eat me up! And then,
I bet you, when
My pa has no little boy, he'll be Sorry he punished me!

And I'm goin' to starve and not Ever eat anything again at all;
And when I'm up with God and got Wings and can look at my pa, and he Comes home and sees my coat in the hall
And looks all around everywhere,
And I ain't there,
I bet he'll be sogry he punished me!

And when I'm far away
And nearly starved, and can hardly stand,
They might be a big, bad man come along and say
He'd take me off to some strange land!
And then, when the people told my pa
How cruel he was, I bet he'd be
The saddest person you ever saw,
And sorry he punished me!

And when they have no little boy no more,
Mamma would cry all day,
And when no little boy would open the door
For pa, at night, and say—
"Hello!" I bet
That's when he'd be the saddest yet—
And I'll stay this time, but he
B-b-b-better quit punishing me!

Boo—hoo—hoo!

How Grandma Danced

Grandma told me all about it;
Told me so I couldn't doubt it—
How she danced—my grandma danced—
Long ago.
How she held her pretty head,
How her dainty skirt she spread,
How she turned her little toes,
Smiling like a human rose!
Long ago.

Grandma's hair was bright and sunny, Dimpled cheek, too—oh, how funny! Really quite a pretty girl, Long ago.
Bless her! Why, she wears a cap, Grandma does, and takes a nap Every single day; and yet Grandma danced the minuet, Long ago.

Now she sits there rocking, rocking, Always knitting grandpa's stocking, (Every girl was taught to knit Long ago.)
Yet her figure is so neat, And her smile so kind and sweet, I can almost see her now, Bending to her partner's bow, Long ago.

Grandma says our modern jumping,
Hopping, rushing, whirling, bumping,
Would have shocked the gentle folk,
Long ago.
No—they moved with stately grace,
Everything in proper place,
Gliding slowly forward, then Slowly courtsying back again,
Long ago.

Modern ways are quite alarming.
Grandma says; but boys were charmingGirls and boys I mean, of course—
Long ago.
Bravely modest, grandly shy—
What if all of us should try
Just to feel like those who met
In the graceful minuet
Long ago.

With the minuet in fashion,
Who could fly into a passion?
All would wear the calm they wore
Long ago.
In time to come, if I perchance
Should tell my grandchild of our dance,
I should really like to say,
"We did, my dear, in some such way,
Long ago."

This poem may be made a most fetching recitation for a little girl, from five to ten years old. The gestures should all be natural, spontaneous and childish. As a general thing little girls take to gestures more readily than little boys. The little girl is wide eyed and earnest in commencing. "My grand ma danced" may be accompanied by a little emphatic nod of the head. Fig. 50 shows a pretty pose for the first half of this stanza. It is taken gradually, first the head, then spreading the skirts, lastly pointing the toe and taking a few old-fashioned dance steps. If possible to learn a few of the minuet steps it will greatly add to the selection to have the child take a few of them after each stanza, while someone plays a soft, low accompaniment on the piano and violin. Go on and tell the next two stanzas in a bright, sunny way. In the fourth verse show what a shocking contrast there is between the old and Fig. 50. "How new ways of dancing. At the last Her Dainty glide slowly forward, courtesy and skirt she glide backward to place. Finish spread, how the piece in a natural childish she Eturned manner. The last half of the last Her Little stanza may be recited in a slightly toes." pensive tone, the head a little to one side up to the last line when you nod your head as though about to show how you did. If you have danced after each verse the music should start and you should dance off the stage, making a stately little courtesy just before you pass through the entrance. Only stately minuet steps should be used. The steps must in no way resemble the modern "jumping, rushing, whirling," etc., described in stanza four. This selection is also adapted for illustration when, instead of the little girl taking the minuet steps, the curtain rolls up noiselessly showing one or more couples dressed as they did "Long ago," dancing the minuet. In this case the speaker must stand well in front so the curtain can fall behind her.

Why Shouldn't You Buy a First-Class Instrument as Low as any Dealer?

The dealer, even though he buys only one at a time, gets it at wholesale price.

When YOU buy one why don't YOU get it at wholesale price?

THE MANUFACTURER who sells through agents and dealers dare not quote you the wholesale price, for he would antagonize the dealers.

THE DEALER cannot sell to you at whole-sale price, for that would leave him no profit. We get along without the dealer and can therefore quote you the wholesale factory prices direct.

We have thousands more satisfied patrons all over the land, who recommend our instruments and defend our business methods, than there are dealers.

And besides, our instruments sell themselves, by the better value they prove over all others—they are better moneys worth than you can get from any dealer or from any other manufacturer.

MY DEARS:

Here comes Mrs. Linden with more music; her life is filled with sunshine, music, love, kindness, sympathy, which she scatters broadcast; she writes me that she visits one shut-in every day—the recipients of those visits are to be envied. With all her personal shut-in work she takes the time to write me and send me a small sum occasionally for my work among them, as I have a long, long list. So many of you deserve credit for that same thing, and I thank you in the name of those to whom I am enabled to send reading matter and cheerful letters. If it is only a stamp or two inclosed it helps in sending Comport, our dear magazine, to those unable to subscribe for it, and feel that they cannot exist without it. One poor dear writes me: "I turn to the Sisters' Corner immediately on receipt of my precious paper, and I get comfort, satisfaction, knowledge. I travel in unknown lands and transport myself oftentimes to the homes of the dear sisters."

To all my tired, nerve-worn teacher girls I would say on this coming summer vacation, just rest, commune with nature (if you are going into the country), sleep, go berrying, help the farmer to rake up his hay, drive the cows to pasture, retire early and rise early, and if you are not timid sleep out of doors. Get on the good side of the milk maid or the man that does the milking, and accompany him down to the barn when he "goes a milking." Take a cup along and drink all he will give you of the warm milk twice a day (if milk agrees with you); any average farmer is pleased to have a young and pretty girl tagging at his heels. Will you ask some of the sisters to write to me, please? I will endeavor to answer all inclosing stamped, directed envelope; tell them I send my love to all of them." She sent me a nice recipe for tomato soup, also a cold preventive. She writes anyone wishing to don a low-necked, evening dress, if they will mix together two ounces of spirits of camphor, two ounces of spirits of ammonia, five ounces of sea salt, one half pint of alcohol, and boiling water enough to make a quart altogether, and rub this well on neck and arms, it will prevent a cold; try it, girls, and thank Edelia for the information.

My favorite boy, James M. Wall, Oxford, North Carolina, writes me beautiful letters. James, I wish you could have even twenty-five cents a day, from some of these millionaires (who would never feel it), to buy some little dainty to tempt your appetite. Friends, those of us that are ill and are fortunate enough to have loved ones constantly thinking of, or preparing something nice for us to eat, think of this poor boy, dependent upon charity. "Well, he gets enough to eat, anyway," I hear some say. Yes, no doubt, but at times he needs something a little different, some little dainty. God pity him! Try to remember him.

Mrs. J. C. Flippin. I have a Peacock cross-stitch design which I will be pleased to send you. Write me inclosing stamped, directed envelope.

Mrs. Spang. You should seek a higher part of the country if afflicted with asthma. Why not try my part of the continent? The attacks are sometimes caused by an over-loaded stomach; abstain from eating supper if they are caused by that, one can usually tell what causes them. Homeopathic aconite is one of the remedies; the little pellets can be procured at most any druggists. Our climate has done wonders for asthmatic difficulties. Write me if you like.

Mrs. Spencer. If you will write to Mrs. Jennie Huff, Villa Rica, Georgia, inclosing stamped, directed envelope, she will give you all the information she can regarding the beer seed. Mrs. Huff is willing and accommodating, but her pocketbook is weak. She has a poor, little, invalid daughter.

Mrs. Nicholson. Try painting the wen with iodine.

Emily Rae. Why not send in three subscriptions to Comport and get a copy of those dear "Old Time Songs."

This is a little ahead of time but most subjects wish to give their Queen (May Queen) a gift, what would be prettier than a coral necklace? Send 30 cents to Comport and get the necklace, together with two yearly subscriptions, which can be birthday gifts to some of the older ones or some poor shut-ins. If all this reaches the eyes of our editor he will not approve of my suggesting all these things to you, but he has been so kind to us for years, that I feel we ought to repay him in some way, and in doing these things we are greatly benefiting him, ourselves, and our friends, so I have a selfish motive in itafter all, you see. S. R.—Under the laws of the State you mention, we are of the opinion that, upon the death of the husband, leaving no will, the surviving wife would be entitled to receive one half of the common property, and the estate would be divided one third to the surviving wife and two thirds to the children, in cases where the decedent leaves him surviving more than one child, but in case there is only one surviving child and no descendants of another child or children the balance would be divided equally between the child and the widow; but in all cases where the estate is less than $1,500. The court has power, after due notice to all creditors, if deemed necessary, by a decree for that purpose, to assign for the use of the widow and minor children all the estate remaining after the expenses of the last sickness of the deceased have been paid, together with funeral charges and expenses of administration.

C. B. L.—If your wife was one of those who was so unfortunate as to win a deed to a piece of property, at the place you mention, for the correct solution of a puzzle published in some newspaper, we are of the opinion that the land, or at any rate her claim to the land, is of no substantial value. However, the only way to find out to a certainty would be to have the title records of the County and State you mention searched, and in that way ascertain whether her title is any good, and if her title should prove to be good you could then have the land inspected and find out whether it has any value. The fact that, as you state, the deed is in proper form does not in any way prove that the title is good, or that the land is of any value.

A. W. E.—Upon your statements to us, we are of the B.. or his estate.

Mrs. S. H. P.—We do not think the man you mention could be punished in the State where the divorce was procured for his remarriage in another State, as the jurisdiction of State Courts does not extend beyond the limits of the State, but, in case he returns to the State and attempt to annoy his first wife, and take the children away from her custody and in that way to disobey the decree of the court, he will be guilty of contempt of court, and can be severely punished. The form of punishment is discretionary with the court, but would probably be either a fine or imprisonment.

S. F. B.—Your letter to us does not disclose the proper information for us to form an opinion as to the person who is vested with the title of the property you mention. We think that in order to ascertain this you should have the title thoroughly examined by some competent lawyer, or person familiar with that class of work, as it will be unsafe for you to purchase this property without doing so.

F. B.—We are of the opinion that the man you mention has a legal right to build or place boards upon his own lot in whatever manner he may see fit, even though it shuts out the light from;his neighbor's windows, but that he has no right to extend his boards in any way upon his neighbor's land.

Mrs. J. S. M.—You fail to state whether your contract with your brother to provide for your mother's support was in writing or simply an oral one. weyance aside or an action against your brother for the money expended for your mother's support.

R. I. A.—We do not think you have any cause to worry. We consider both your own and your mother's marriage to be perfectly valid ones.

Mrs. M. I. C.—Upon your statements to us, we are of the opinion that either you or your brother can sell or dispose the undivided interest belonging to either one of you in your father's estate, and neither one can prevent the other from disposing of such interest. The more usual way, in case the estate consists of real estate, is for one of the heirs to bring a partition suit of the property and then, in case the court is unable to make an equitable division of the land, the property is sold and the money divided among the heirs according to their right in the estate. We think that in your case, if you do not want the land sold, the only course for you to pursue is to bring such an action and buy the property in at the sale, or make terms with your brother and buy his share without going to the expense of such as suit, unless, of course, you can prevail upon him to hold his property undivided as it now is.

(3) You can employ another lawyer as counsel to your present attorney, but we do not think it would benefit you much, unless you procured a substitution, as the attorney of record is the one upon whom all process must be served, and who has charge of the management of the procedure in the case.

E. J. H.—We think the only relief the law provides for you would be an action against your husband for the recovery of your property; but, in case he can prove that you voluntarily turned it over to him, you would be defeated in such an action, and there is nothing you can do except to compel him to support you. It is a very difficult matter for a wife to recover property she has turned over to her husband. In almost all cases she has no chance to recover it.

Mrs. F. G. G.—Under the laws of the State you mention, and upon the statements made by you to us, we are of the opinion that, if the man you mention left no will, his real estate upon his death would descend, subject to a right of dower of his widow to a one third interest in all his real estate, to his children and their descendants, and that his personal property would be distributed, one third to his widow absolutely, and the balance to his children and their descendants. We think the better way for the son you mention, who has bought from the other children their interest in the estate, would be to get from them a deed to the property and that the widow should join in this deed, and that the deed should be recorded; whether the other heirs, upon the death of the mother, would have any further interest in the estate depends entirely upon the terms of the agreement which you say all except the mother signed. Post Card Album That Will Hold Fifty Cards.

Our fifty-card Album is the most attractive on the market. On each page two cards may be displayed; the leaves are very heavy rigid paper stock of a heavy green shade, providing a very tasty and attractive background for all cards, and when two pages are opened together showing four cards, the appearance is extremely attractive, and one cannot neatly preserve a collection of Post Cards unless they are displayed in an Album. And better still, a very nice collection of Bouvenir Postal Cards represents the individual and personal thought of absent or distant relatives and friends and they are very entertaining for visitors who enjoy looking them over; so, that in an Album, arranged in order, they are readily accessible and may be examined time after time with no harm to the Cards, and thus preserved in remembrance of the senders. No one thinks of collecting Souvenir Cards without an Album. Everyone wants an Album and the demand, just now, exceeds the supply. We are fortunate in having a great quantity on hand of first-class Albums which we are to distribute as premiums to those who will send us clubs of subscribers to this magazine as per our offer below.

Chub Offer For a club of only 2 yearly subscribers to an Album free and will include a set of four Post Cards free, as a beginning towards filling the Album.

Conducted by Cousin Marion

In order that each cousin may be answered in this column, no cousin must ask more than three questions in one Month.

PRIL showers bring May flowers, my dears, and April with or without the showers brings my cousin flowers to me and me to them, which is very pleasant for me, whatever the cousins may think of it, if I don't happen to be cousins may think of it, if I don't happen to be cousing a supplier as supplier as supplier as supplier as supplier as supplier. cousins may think of it, if I don't happen to be quite as sunshiny as some of them would like. Still this is spring and in the spring everything is lovely, bright, fresh and hopeful and let us take new courage and go right onward and upward. In the mean time we must get to work, which is with us spring, summer, auturns and winter.

The first letter I open is from a "Troubled" cousin of Denver, Col., who has a sweetheart, or at least a young man who comes miles to see her, and shows all the signs of a lover, but he will not tell her he loves her. She is troubled about it, and I don't blame her. Still I wouldn't worry too much over it. It harms her and doesn't help the cause any. When he comes around again, I think, she should indirectly hint to him that she had another suitor, and ask him for his advice on the matter. That usually opens a dilatory young man's eyes and brings him to his senses. Men become careless when they think they have everything their own way.

Snowball, Los Angeles, Cal.—Don't let your bear

Snowball, Los Angeles, Cal.—Don't let your heart ache over the young man. A girl at nineteen should have something better for her heart to do than that. While you are waiting for him to come back, suppose you see if there isn't quite as nice a one to take his place, I am sure there is. (2) It is quite proper to go to the dance, if you have a chaperon. Why don't you girls combine and teach the young men better manners, by not going to their dances at all unless they come after you? They have to have girls at dances and if the girls won't go unless they are escorted by the young men, how will there be any dances? You need a leader. (3) No especial harm in giving the men your phototo them?

Red and White Rose, Jenning, Kans.—Young girls.

Red and White Rose, Jenning, Kans.—Young girls should not have escorts, other than nurses, before they are out of school, and have given up books for beaus. (2) No, don't tell your escort that you have a proposal. I am sure he wouldn't like to hear it.

W. T., Thelma, Mo.—Surely twelve-year-old girls should submit all those questions to their mothers. Your teacher could answer them just as well.

Western Girl, Portland, Ore.—It is quite correct to take the man's arm when walking with him. Under the circumstances it would be proper even if he did not ask you. (2) Unless you are very anxious for him to have your photograph, don't give it to him. It is all right to exchange photographs among old friends, but not new ones.

graphs among old friends, but not new ones.

Blue Eyes, Audrey, Ore.—Can't you guess about as near as I would tell you? You know it isn't proper. (2) The veranda is a very usual place for lovers to tell each other good night. You may do as you please, if your parents do not object.

Marie, Lodi, Wis.—I should say the little country dance among neighbors was quite harmless. (2) To wink at anyone is considered vulgar. (3) If the young man tips his hat to other girls and not to you, do not speak to him until he learns better manners.

Brownie, Lakeville, Minn.—Possibly you are over particular, but if the girls and young fellows are as you say, I think it would be better to go somewhere else. But don't go until you have fixed a place for yourself, and know it will have none of the objectionable features of your present surroundings. Girls cannot be too careful in their associates.

associates.

Hopeful Trixy, Millard, Neb.—The young man is simply having fun with you. So far you have acted quite sensibly, and I hope you will continue to do so. Whenever he talks love, laugh at him. The minute you weaken, that minute he will drop you and go to his city sweetheart. These city chaps like to have a green country sweetheart, and most country girls haven't half as much sense about such fellows as you have, and you haven't quite as much as you ought to have. Why do you want to keep his picture? You like him, though you knew he is fooling you, and that is why you are not as sensible as you should be.

Less Moffitt. N. D.—Girls of fourteen should not Jess, Moffitt, N. D.—Girls of fourteen should not go to dances with or without beaus, country or city. School is the place for such children.

Sad Heart, Mangohick, Va.—Marry the one you love and snap your fingers at all your enemies.

Broken Heart, Springfield, Ill.—You are quite right; three years is plenty long enough for a man to know whether he wants to marry a girl, or not, after he has told her he loves her. Tell him gently but firmly, that you think it is best for you two to seek other companionship. That is, unless he has a very good excuse for waiting.

Brown Eyes, Riverdale, Neb.—Remind him of his promise to return the ring to you. He will not be offended unless he is silly sensitive. (2) Nothing in the stamp that counts. (3) You might visit the sick man with the consent of the people in charge of him, but not otherwise. As your presence seems to be of such benefit, I should think they would be cled to have you with him. to have you with him.

Ackley Belle, Cleve., O.—Treat him exactly as the treats you—when he flirts, you flirt, and when the doesn't like your methods, you dislike his methods. What is sauce for the gander is sauce for the coose, or ought to be. Let him do part of the vorrying over the course of true love.

Brown-eyed Bertha, Alexander, Idaho.—The custom of arm taking is not so much in vogue now as it used to be. He may take your arm, or you his, according to the needs of the occasion. It doesn't make much difference, one way or another. (2) My! I thought every girl thought the proper age to marry was just as soon'as she could find the man. Now that you have asked me, I'll say, as I have dozens of times here, that a girl should not marry until she has finished her girlhood and begins to long for the enduring regard and presence of some one man above all the others. Most girls about twenty-three, begin to fear that they will die old maids. By the time they are twenty-five, they are more sensible, and that is a good age to marry, and the man should be at least five years older, if not ten. (3) The engagement ring goes on the third finger of the left hand. Where have you been all this time not to know that?

Violet, Hanover, Ind.—Wait till he writes is all

Violet, Hanover, Ind.—Wait till he writes is all you can do. (2) In the nature of things you cannot live always at home, so I think it would be wise, if you love someone who loves you, and he is all right, that you should marry.

Clover Blossom, Peru, Ind.—Don't marry a gam bler. Gambling is as bad as drunkenness.

Daisy B., Galena, Md.—A boy of fifteen does not know his own mind when it leans towards marrying a girl three years his senior. You should have mind enough for both and not marry him. However, it is your own business, and I suppose you'll do as you please.

There, dears, all questions are answered, and we can go out and gather some spring flowers to brighten us all up until we meet again next month. May the good Lord watch over us and bring us together again. By, by.

COUSIN MARION.

Jerry, the Backwoods Boy

lawyer eagerly. "That is out of the question," said Mabel

"That is out of the question," said Mabel gravely.

"Let me hope that I may prevail upon you to alter your mind. If assiduous devotion—"

"Sir, I repeat it, this is out of the question. I will not stop to discuss the question of time and its effect upon my mind. Another circumstance stands in the way, which I will not hesitate to disclose to you from motives of maidenly delicacy. Learn that my heart has been won by another, and if I marry anyone, he will be my husband."

Clarke's brow darkened.

"It is young Davenport," he said.

"How you should have arrived at this knowledge, I know not," said Mabel. "However, it saves me the trouble of my intended disclosure. You are right. It is Henry Davenport."

"But," said the lawyer insinuatingly, "when he learns that your father's happiness is involved, he will agree to surrender your hand."

Mabel's face flushed indignantly. "It might occur to him," she said sarcastically, "to inquire how far such a sacrifice would promote my father's happiness. Allow me to correct an evident misapprehension. Learn, then, that my engagement to Henry Davenport is not my only obstacle to complying with the proposal you have made. The other is insurmountable."

"I do not ask you," said the lawyer, "to marry me for love. That will come in time, and I am willing to wait for it. I am not sentimental, but I like you, and want you for my wife. I am in a condition to offer your father what he values in return. You see I have stated it as a business transaction."

"I am glad you have placed it on the right footing," said Mabel. "It will make it less embarrassing. I feel free, then, to urge you instead of my hand, that it is quite impossible for me to grant, to accept a part of this money you say it is in your power to place in my father's hands."

"I have already signified to your father," said the lawyer coolly, "that this is a proposition which I cannot consider."

you say it is in your power to place in my father's hands."

"I have already signified to your father," said the lawyer coolly, "that this is a proposition which I cannot consider."

"Perhaps you think thus to force me to your terms," said Mabel, "but I may as well say that this is a sacrifice I cannot make even for my father. Take money, and you can name your own terms. Otherwise you may regard business between us as at an end."

"I should prefer that you would not make up your mind too hastily," said Dick Clarke, with an incredulous look that incensed Mabel, implying as it did doubt of the strength of her resolution. "I shall remain here some days more, and hope during that time you may reconsider your present determination."

"Good morning, sir," said Mabel haughtily.

"What a splendid creature she is!" mused the lawyer when alone. "I like her all the better for her pride. She's offish now, but she'll come to it yet."

Mrs. Cora B. Miller Makes a Fortune

Started a Few Years Ago with No Capital, and Now Employs Nearly One Hundred Clerks and Stenographers.

Until a few years ago Mrs. Cora B. Miller lived in a manner similar to that of thousands of other very poor women of the average small town and village. She now resides in her own palatial brown-stone residence, and is considered one of the most successful business women in the United States.

Mrs. Miller's New Residence Earned in Less Than One Year.

Several years ago Mrs. Miller learned of a mild and simple preparation that cured herself and several friends of female weakness and piles. She was besieged by so many women needing treatment that she decided to furnish it to those who might call for it. She started with only a few dollars' capital, and the remedy, possessing true and won-derful merit, producing many cures when doctors and other remedies failed, the demand grew so and other remedies issied, the demand grew so rapidly she was several times compelled to seek larger quarters. She now occupies one of the city's largest office buildings, which she owns, and almost one hundred clerks and stenographers are required to assist in this great business.

Million Women Use It.

More than a million women have used Mrs. Miller's remedy, and no matter where you live, she can refer you to ladies in your own locality who can and will tell any sufferer that this marvelous remedy really cures women. Despite the fact that Mrs. Miller's business is very extensive, she is always willing to give aid and advice to every suffering woman who writes to her. She is a generous, good woman and has decided to give away to women who have never used her medicine $10,000.00 worth absolutely FREE.

Every woman suffering with pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing-down feelings, nervousness, creeping sensations up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, or piles from any cause, should sit right down and send her name and address to Mrs. Cora B. Miller, Box 8384, Kokomo, Ind., and receive by mail (free of charge in plain wrapper) a 50-cent box of her marvelous medicine; also her valuable book, which every woman should have.

Remember, this offer will not last long, for thousands and thousands of women who are suffering will take advantage of this generous means of getting cured. So if you are ailing, do not suffer another day, but send your name and address to Mrs. Miller for the book and medicine before the $10,000.00 worth is all gone.

In order to meet the demand for information made by COMFORT readers on the kindred subjects of Etiquette and Personal Appearance, this column will be devoted to them, and all questions will be answered, but no inquirer shall ask more than two questions each month. We would suggest to readers to cut this column out and paste it in a scrap book. Address letters to Etiquette Editor, COMFORT, Augusta Maine.

Miss F. J., Webb, Miss.—A face bleach is prepared as follows: Corrosive sublimate, ten grains; distilled water, half pint; rose water, half pint. Kepin glass bottle and mark it "Poison!" Apply once daily, pouring out a small portion in a saucer.

The Limit, Peoria, Ill.—We do not know the custom in Peoria, but elsewhere the groom does not pay for the bride's wedding dress. Bridesmaids may wear any tint that they wish as most becoming to them. Pink is pretty for June, but it must be only the faintest pink, nothing pronounced. The guests should be seated at the table with the bride and groom at one side, and the attendants to their right and left in their order.

Reader, Waldo, O.—A corset properly worn, that is not too tight and not too stiff, is preferable to none at all. Still, some people believe that corsets are injurious. You may wear one or not, as you Please.

Parthenia, Trafalgar, Ark.—You may wear any color if it is not pronounced, and not mixed with other colors that do not harmonize. You ought to be able to tell by what colors you like best and make you look the way you want to look. Your dress should be as other girls of sixteen wear theirs in your community. Wear your hair as is most becoming to you, whatever the style may be. You don't have to follow fashion and look hideous as some girls do. You must decide for yourself about your summer dresses. It will depend on how much money you have to spend. The simpler the things the better, and you can get all sorts of whites, and tints, and grays in material worth from five cents to a dollar a yard.

Crimson Rambler, Jeffersontown, Ky.—Yes, when a gentleman "spurns her letter," it is proper for the lady to ask him "what's up." But you must do it politely. (2) If the man's fiancee does not object, it is proper for him to go out with another girl. (3) If the custom in Jeffersontown is for the girl to kiss the young man good night, we suppose there is nothing else to do but observe the fashion or be considered odd. You may do as you please.

Dark-eyed Elsie, Chateaugay, N. Y.—We haven't space to tell you how to fit up your bedroom daintly, but not expensively, but it can be done. The better way is for you to study it out yourself and do it by degrees. Read over a lot of magazines that contain such matter and get ideas from all. Then you can have about you what is your arrangement and not a borrowed one. Don't you think that is better? Read the advertisements for all kinds of suggestions for room decorations.

Blue Eyes, Readsville, Mo.—You can be slender by eating the plainest kind of food with no fat, sweets or water, and working off the surplus flesh by vigorous exercise. You won't find it easy, but plenty of women do that rather than remain stout. For your hair use the following: Sulphate of quinine, twenty grains; tincture cantharides (alcoholic) two drams; extract Jaborandi, two drams; glycerine, one ounce; bay rum, six ounces; elderflower water sufficient to make one pint. Apply at night.

Lily Bell, Boyden, Iowa.—The lady leads the way into her own house, unless it is dark and she is afraid. Then the man goes first. (2) Alady should act in the presence of young men like a lady.

Carnation, Ware Shoals, S. C.—It is a matter entirely to be decided by yourself. It seems rather hard on a nice young man with nice parents, to condemn him because one of his grandparents was not what she should have been. If you love the young man, marry him. You might do much worse with some man whose people were respectable for forty generations back.

K. R. D., Waterbury, Conn.—The best way to settle a difference between a man and woman, who have become estranged without any definite reason known to both, is for the one who doesn't know what the matter is to ask for information. Frankness is the best way to get at it. Simply tell him that something is wrong and you want to know what it is. If he declines to tell you, let it go at that, and find somebody with better head and heart.

Reader, Chariton, Iowa.—Peroxide will change the color of the hair. You can get it from your druggist. Tell him what you want with it and ask about its use. Be careful because it is a strong COMFORT Reader, St. Louis, Mo.—If you want to Comfort Reader, St. Louis, Mo.—If you want to know what will stop hair from growing whether it affects the skin or not, we may tell you that a red-hot iron applied to the spot will do it. Hold it on for a minute. After that the hair will not grow on that spot any more. You may need a doctor's care afterward, but you didn't ask about that. We believe there are specialists who can stop it with electricity, but they are very expensive.

Busy Bee, Franklin, Minn.—When a lady wishes to keep company with a gentleman she makes it known to him by accepting his attentions with all the grace she can command. It is the man's place, however, to say about that, and if he does not wish to be your steady company, you can't coax him to be so. The man offers his attentions and if the lady wishes them, she accepts. There is no rule for that sort of conduct.

Anxious, Essex, Iowa.—In congratulating a bridal couple when you know but one, congratulate that one, and you will be introduced. Even if it should be overlooked, extend your congratulations to both just the same. It is different with a graduating class where you do not know all the members. You congratulate only those you know.

Jennie Lynn, Frazeysburg, O.—You are not old enough to "keep company" with any young man until you are out of school and have nothing else to do. (2) Call your nine girls "The Muses"—there were nine of them. Or the "Novem"—Latin for nine. Or the "N.G."—nine girls.

Abe, Birch, Nevada.—You should have offered your services as escort, and they could have accepted or not, as they pleased. Probably they could attend to the matter better without you.

Country Girl, Peninsula, O.—Simply thank the gentleman who said he was glad to meet you, or say nothing, recognizing the conventional compliment by smiling. Or you could tell him you were quite as glad to meet him. (2) Thank him for the courtesy. There is no set rule for what you shall say in response to courtesies, if you want to be natural. Say what you please so long as it pleases the other person.

Daisy, Spokane, Wash.—Certainly tell him you have enjoyed yourself, if you have. Why not? And thank anyone for any courtesy. See answer above. Ruby, Freeport, III.—The ordinary depilatories will remove hair temporarily, but they are not much superior to simple shaving with a razor. Better let the hair alone. It is natural and does no harm. Country Girl, Auston, Ala.—A good pimple lotion is compounded as follows: Precipitate of sulphur, spirits of camphor, and glycerine, one dram, each; rose water, four ounces. Apply night and morning, after thoroughly washing and drying the face. Be careful in your diet, eating no sweets, no fried things, and only lean meat. Stop drinking coffee. Vaseline applied gently will soothe the pain of the first burn if you wish something more elaborate and expensive try this: Jelly of Roses, it is called: Finest Russian isinglass, half ounce; glycerine, two ounces; rose water, six ounces; oil of rose, ten drops. Apply daily.

Blue Bell, Memphis, Tenn.—See answer above to "Miss F. J.," for red face, and answer to "Country Girl," next above, for pimples.

D. C., Sigel, Ill.—If you will massage your face and neck daily using a massage cream made as follows, you may produce the results you seek: Tanin, half gram; lanoline, thirty grams; oil of sweet almonds, twenty grams; oil of rose geranium, four drops. Use the same for circles under the eyes at the same time gently massaging outward and downward to remove the congestion. Do not rub hard enough to redden the skin.

So many inquiries are received by COMFORT concerning the health of the family the remedies and advice here given are intended only for simple cases; serious cases should be referred to physicians, not to us. S. M. S., Groveland, Ill.—For your sore mouth try a wash of one part carbolic acid to one hundred of water. Use the wash three times a day. Distressed, Floyd, Ia.—At your age, and with your health, you should do nothing now, but eat plenty of nourishing food, keep in pleasant company and don't think about yourself. You will soon be in good shape, and when you have got down to hard work and are making enough to support a wife, get one, and a home of your own with a bunch of children to liven up the household and gain the good will of President Roosevelt.

Reader, Fostoria, O.—It is rather difficult to assign a cause for your headaches, knowing no more than we do of your general condition. They may come from indigestion. Are you troubled with it at all? Fostoria has good doctors handy. Consult one of them. Try bromo seltzer when you get up. B. F. W., Tallapoosa, Ga.—There is no simple remedy to reduce the bust. Try Vaucaire's. It is as follows: Aristol, two grains; white vaseline, thirty grams; essence of peppermint, ten drops. Rub very gently with this every night. Then cover with the following compress, and keep on twelve hours; iodide of potassium, three grams; vaseline, fifty grams; lanoline, fifty grams; incture benzoin, twenty drops. (2) There is nothing in vaseline, that we know of, which will make the hair grow. Petroleum is good for the hair, but there is hardly enough in vaseline to be of much effect. A little vaseline rubbed into the roots of the hair, now and then, will not do any harm, and may do good.

E. P. E., Daniel, Miss.—The trouble with your eyes is that the duct which should conduct the tears off through the nasal passages is closed, and they, being unable to escape in the natural way, simply overflow. Possibly an oculist, or may be, an ordinary physician, can remedy the trouble. We cannot.

H. E. N., Forest City, Ia.—If there is much tartar on the teeth the only way to remove it is to have it done by a dentist. After that, you can keep it off by scraping the teeth with a knife blade, as soon as you detect by a little roughness the accumulating tartar. Washing the mouth with cooking soda in water is a detergent, and it will not hurt to drink a glassful or so of water with half a teaspoonful of soda dissolved in it, once or twice a day. Reduce the acid in the mouth, and you reduce the tartar and the cause of it.

Margie, Mt. Pleasant, Texas.—There are dozens of remedies for constipation, which are known to all persons. If you have tried them all and have found no relief, you must consult a physician. Even they are helpless, frequently, and suffer with it themselves. We are inclined to believe that the rules of physical culture, with especial reference to exercise of the muscles surrounding and controlling the stomach and bowels is the best remedy. It calls for work and application, but it helps nature more than medicine does. Get a book on Physical Culture and read it.

J. J. J., St. Louis, Mo.—It is impossible to answer your questions in this column, as simple as they are. Go to any physician, and ask him what you have asked us, telling him that you are unable to pay and he will be glad to tell you what you want to know. Probably the best place for you to go would be to the physicians in some of the city hospitals, or to some woman physician. You are seeking a kind of information that physicians of the better class make no charge for. Don't go to a cheap doctor and don't be afraid to ask for what you want to know. You are quite right as far as you know already.

Sunflower Girl, Howard, Kans.—A bunion is a hard thing to cure, and there is no immediate remedy. It is the result of gradual pressure and friction, and its relief is as gradual. First wear a shoe that is the easiest possible, then poultice with any of the ordinary poultices. Sometimes only the doctor's lancet will produce relief. Bunion plasters, to be had at drug stores, are oftentimes very efficient. The first thing to do, however, is to wear the right kind of shoe. You can tell that by the feeling.

Mrs. J. L. S., Crooked Creek, Pa.—It is more than probable that the little one died without pain. Your physician should be able to give you definite information as to the cause of death. It is not usual for children to die suddenly as older persons do. Only such a blow on the throat as the child could scarcely have received would have proved fatal instantly. If she had suffered at all, there would have been signs of it. Don't worry over what the Lord willed to do in His own way.

Miss E., Brunswick, Neb.—Maybe you have neuralgia. That aches the face worse than anything. We think if you will simply rub your face, that is, massage it, not too strong, but enough to get the circulation going properly and do it every night and morning, you will work the pain out. Girls of nineteen should be strong and well. Don't take medicine, but take exercise and get the sunshine.

Subscriber, Jones, Mich.—Cold sores come from defective indigestion about as much as anything else, and if you eat the right kind of food and assimilate it properly, which is good digestion, you won't have them. Take Epsom salts at their first appearance and continue it until they disappear, dieting yourself in the mean time.

The Dying Californian

Lay up nearer, brother, nearer;
For my limbs are growing cold—
And thy presence seemeth dearer
When thy arms around me fold;
I am dying, brother, dying,
Soon you'll miss me in your berth;
For my frame will soon be lying
'Neath the ocean's briny surf.

Hearken to me, brother hearken, I have something I could say Ere the veil my vision darken, And I go from hence away; am going, surely going, But my hope in God is strong; am willing brother, knowing That He doeth nothing wrong.

Tell my father when you greet him.
That in death I prayed for him—
Prayed that I might one day meet him
In a world that's free from sin;
Tell my mother—(God assist her
Now that she is growing old)
Say her child would glad have kissed her
When his lips grew pale and cold.

Listen brother, catch each whisper—
'Tis my wife I speak of now;
Tell, oh! tell her how I missed her
When the fever burned my brow—
Tell her, brother, closely listen,
Don't forget a single world—
That in death my eyes did glisten
With the tears her memory stirred.

Tell her she must kiss my children
Like the kiss I last impressed,
Hold them as when last I held them
Folded closely to my breast;
Give them early to their Maker,
Putting all her trust in God,
And He never will forsake her,
For He's said so in his Word.

O my children! heaven bless them!
They were all my life to me:
Would I could once more caress them
Ere I sink beneath the sea.
'Twas for them I crossed the ocean
What my hopes were I'll not tell—
But I've gained an orphan's portion,
Yet He doeth all things well.

Tell my sister I remember
Every kindly parting word,
And my heart has been left tender
By the thoughts thy memory stirred;
Tell them I n'eer reached the haven
Where I sought the precious dust,
But I shall gain a port called heaven,
Where the gold all never rust.

Urge them to secure an entrance,
For they'll find their brother there—
Faith in Jesus and repentance
Will secure for each a share.
Hark! I hear my Saviour speaking,
Yes, I know His voice so well;
When I'm gone, oh, don't be weeping!
Brother, here's my last farewell

To be very frank the only way that I can possibly produce these cigars at the money is, because the pieces of tobacco in 'em are too short for fine shapes, and, therefore, they become what we manufacturers call "Seconds."

I am really selling you two dollars' worth of Havana tobacco at Tobacco value with nothing added for rolling it into cigars. And I haven't wasted any money to make a good looking

I won't guarantee that I can produce enough cigars to supply all the demand I shall receive, and therefore will not sell more than 100 at $2.00 to any one smoker. So if you really care to participate in this offer, my personal advice to you is to get your order in the mail tonight. If after receiving the cigars and trying them, you are not satisfied, I'll return your money without delay.

Incidently I want to say that I am the largest manufacturer in the world selling cigars directly to the consumer. I am the only manufacturer selling strictly for cash. Credit accounts mean losses—can't help it—bound to be that way. Manufacturers selling on credit must make you pay their losses. Credit accounts mean expensive bookkeeping methods and many clerks. Accurate Predictions Correctly Foretold. No Mercury. No Glass. No Fail. Just Watch the Color Change.

This weather warning will faithfully forecast the weather for the ensuing twenty-four hours, so that you can get your own weather report without waiting for the newspapers to tell you what the weather report is going to be. It is a cyclone warning. When the pretty little prophet changes the color of herdress, giving a signal that there is a storm approaching, and as the storm subsides, or if it will be over during the next twenty-four hours, behold another color dress appears to gladden the hearts of mankind. These signals come on an easel back embossed color pad showing a pretty young lady figure arrayed in a nainsook material. They are guaranteed to last for years as they are chemically treated; the whole thing being so simple a child will understand it at once. When the devastating hurricane, cyclone and wind storms are approaching your home, this machine warns you long ahead, giving you time to prepare. It is wonderful and will save your life and many a dollar besides. It tells you whether you had better take your umbrella with you today. It tells a lady the weather, and she will know the most suitable dress to wear, etc. Climatic conditions make no difference; our device is practical in all states, under any conditions and its necuracy will astound you. If you desire scientific advance information on the weather you must provide yourself with one of these invaluable weather forecasters. "Edna, are you tired, or can you sing some for me?"

"Reading aloud rarely fatigues me. What shall I sing?"

"That solemn, weird thing in the 'Prophet,' which suits your voice so well."

She sang "Ah, mon fils!" and then, without waiting for the request which she knew would follow, gave him some of his favorite Scotch songs.

As the last sweet strains of "Mary of Argyle" echoed through the study, the pastor shut his eyes, and memory fiew back to the early years when his own wife Mary had sung those words in that room, and his dead darlings clustered eagerly around the piano to listen to their mother's music.

Edna thought he had fallen asleep, he was so still, his face was so placid; and she came softly back to her chair and looked at the ruby temples and towers, the glittering domes and ash-gray ruined arcades built by the oak coals.

A month had elapsed since her arrival at the parsonage, and during that short period Mr. Hammond had rallied and recovered his strength so unexpectedly that hopes were entertained of his entire restoration; and he spoke confidently of being able to reenter his pulpit on Easter Sunday.

The society of his favorite pupil seemed to render him completely happy, and his countenance shone in the blessed light that gladdened his heart.

Ito all of Edna's literary schemes he entered eagerly.

Mrs. Murray came every day to the parsonage, but Edna had not visited Le Bocage; and though Mr. Murray spent two mornings of each week with Mr. Hammond, he called at stated bours, and she had not yet met him. Twice she had heard his voice in earnest conversation, and several times she had seen his tail figure coming up the walk, out to he features she caught not a glimpse. St. Limo' name she caught not a glimpse. St. Limo' name she caught not a glimpse. St. Limo' name him. Twice his mother or the pastor, but Hudah talked ceaselessiy of his kindness to her. Knowing, Edna always absented here his mother or the pastor, out the form the invalid's room until the west of the church to play on the organ; and after an hour of mournful enjoyment in the gallery so fraught with precious reminiscences she left the church and found Taleriane tied to the iron gate, but his master was not visible. She knew that he was somewhere in the building or yard, and denied here was not visible. She knew that he was somewhere in the building or yard, and denied here so the pleasure of going there a second time. Neither glance nor word had been exchanged since they parted at the rairoad station, eighteen months before. She longed to know his opinion of her book, for many passages had been written with special reference to his perusal but she would not ask; and it was a sore trilator sit in one room, hearing the low, indistinct murmur of his voice in the next, and yet never to see him.

Few women could have withstood the temptation; but the orphan dreaded his singular power over her heart, and dared not trust hereif in his presence.

This evening, as she sat with the firelight shining on her face, thinking of the past, she could not realize that only two years had elapsed since she came daily to this quiet room to recit her length shing of the past, she could not realize that only t there was a brief silence, broken at last by Mr. Hammond.

"Edna, my child, are you really happy?"
"So happy that I believe the wealth of California could not buy this sheet of paper, which assures me that I have been instrumental in bringing sunshine to a darkened household; in calling the head of a family from haunts of vice and midnight orgies back to his wife and children; back to the shrine of prayer at his own hearthstone! I have not lived in vain, for through my work a human soul has been brought to Jesus, and I thank God that I am accounted worthy to labor in my Lord's vineyard!"

The old man's eyes filled as he noted the radiance of the woman's lovely face.

"You have indeed cause for gratitude and great joy, as you realize all the good you are destined to accomplish, and I know the rapture of saving souls, for, through God's grace, I be-destined to accomplish, and I know the rapture of saving souls, for, through God's grace, I believe I have snatched some from the brink of ruin. But, Edna, can the triumph of your genius, the applause of the world, the approval of conscience, even the assurance that you are laboring successfully for the cause of Christ—can all these things satisfy your womanly heart—your loving, tender heart? My child, there is a dreary look sometimes in your eves, that reveals loneliness, almost weariness of life. I have studied your countenance closely when it was in repose; I read it I think without errors. Edna, are you perfectly contented with your lot?" A shadow drifted slowly over the marble face.

and though it settled on no feature, the whole countenance was changed.

"I cannot say that I am perfectly content, and yet I would not exchange places with any woman I know."

"Do you ever regret a step which you took one evening, yonder in my church?"

"No, sir, I do not regret it. I often thank God that I was able to obey my conscience and take that step."

"No, sir, I do not regret it. I often thank God that I was able to obey my conscience and take that step."

"Suppose that in struggling up the steep path of duty one soul needs the encouragement, the cheering companionship which only one other human being can give? Will the latter be guiltless if the aid is obstinately withheld?"

"Suppose the latter feels that in joining hands both would stumble?"

"You would not, oh, Edna! you would lift each other to noble heights! Each life would be perfect, complete. My child, will you let me tell you some things that ought to—"

She threw up her hand, with that old, child-ish gesture which he remembered so well, and shook her head.

"No, sir; no sir! Please tell me nothing that will rouse a sorrow I am striving to drug."

"My dear little Edna, as I look at you and think of your future, I am troubled about you. I wish I could confidently say to you, what that same St. Chrysostom wrote to Pentadia: For I know your great and lofty soul, which can sail as with a fair wind through many tempests, and in the midst of the waves enjoy a white call."

Lee turned and took the minister's hand in Le turned and took the minister's hand in hers, while an indescribable peace settled on her countenance, and stilled the trembling of her low, sweet voice:

"Across the her low, sweet voice:

"Across the stormy billows of life, that white calm of eternity is rimming the waterline, coming to meet me. Already the black pilot-boat heaves in sight; I hear the signal, and Death will soon take the helm and steer my little bark safely into the shining rest, into God's 'white calm.'"

She went to the piano and sung, as a solo, "Night's Shade no Longer," from Moses in Egypt.

Egypt. While the pastor listened, he murmured to himself

"Sublime is the faith of a lonely soul In pain and trouble cherished; Sublime the spirit of hope that lives When earthly hope has perished."

She turned over the sheets of music, hunt-ing for a German hymn of which Mr. Hammond was very fond, but he called her back to the fire-ing for a demand was very fond, but he called her back to the nreplace.

"My dear, do you recollect that beautiful passage in Faber's 'Sights and Thoughts in Foreign Churches'? 'There is seldom a line of glory written upon the earth's face but a line of suffering runs parallel with it; and they that read the lustrous syllables of the one, and stoop not to decipher the spotted and worn inscription of the other, get the least half of the lesson earth has to give.'"

"No, sir; I never read the book. Comething in that passage brings to my mind those words of Martin Luther's, which explain so many of the 'spotted inscriptions' of this earth; 'Our Lord God doth like a printer, who setteth the letters backward. We see and feel well His setting, but we shall read the print yonder, in the life to come!"

backward. We see and feel well His setting, but we shall read the print yonder, in the life to come!"

At this moment the doorbell rang, and soon after the servant brought in a telegraphic dispatch, addressed to Mr. Hammond.

It was from Gordon Leigh, announcing his arroll in New York, and stating that he and Gertrude would reach the parsonage some time during the ensuing week.

Edna went into the kitchen to superintend the preparation of the minister's supper; and when she returned and placed the waiter on the table near his chair, she told him that she must go back to New York immediately after the arrival of Gordon and Gertrude, as her services would no longer be required at the parsonage and her pupils needed her.

Two days passed without any further allusion to a subject which was evidently uppermost in Mr. Hammond's mind.

On the morning of the third, Mrs. Murray said, as she rose to conclude her visit: "You are so much better, sir, that I must claim Edna for a day at least. She has not yet been to Le Bocage; and as she goes away so soon, I want to take her home with me this morning. Clara Inge promised me that she would stay with you until evening. Edna, get your bonnet. I shall he entirely alone today, for St. Elmo has carried Huldah to the plantation, and they will not get home until late. So, my dear, we shall have the house all to ourselves."

The orphan could not deny herself the happiness offered; she knew that she ought not to go, but for once her strength falled her, she yielded to the temptation.

During the drive Mrs. Murray talked cheerfully of various things, and for the first time ness offered; she knew that she ought not to go, but for once her strength failed her, she yielded to the temptation.

During the drive Mrs. Murray talked cheerfully of various things, and for the first time laid aside entirely the haughty constraint which had distinguished her manner since they traveled south from New York.

They entered the avenue, and Edna gave herself up to the rushing recollections which were so mournfully sweet. As they went into the house, and the servants hurried forward to welcome her, she could not repress her tears. She felt that this was her home, her heart's home; and as numerous familiar objects met her eyes, Mrs. Murray saw that she was almost overpowered by her emotions.

"I wonder if there is any other place on earth half so beautiful!" murmured the governess several hours later, as they sat looking out over the lawn, where the deer and sheep were browsing.

"Certainly not to our partial ever And year

ing. Certainly not to our partial eyes. And yet without you, my child, it does not seem like home. It is the only home where you will ever be happy."
"Yes, I know it; but it cannot be mine. Mrs.

Murray, I want to see my own little room."
"Certainly; you know the way. I will join you there presently. Nobody has occupied it since you left, for I feel toward your room as I once felt toward the empty cradle of my dear once felt toward the empty cradle of my dear child."

Edna went upstairs alone and closed the door of the apartment she had so long called hers, and looked with childish pleasure and affection at the rosewood furniture.

Turning to the desk where she had written much that the world now praised and loved, she saw a vase containing a superb bouquet, with a card attached by a strip of ribbon. The hothouse flowers were arranged with exquisite taste, and the orphan's cheeks glowed suddenly as she recognized Mr. Murray's handwriting on the card: "For Edna Earl." When she took up the bouquet a small envelope similarly addressed dropped out.

For some minutes she stood irresolute, fearing to trust herself with the contents; then she drew a chair to the desk, sat down, and broke the seal:

the seal:

teeth, so that it clings fast to the hair, avoiding loss by dropping out as combs usually do. A plain shell comb without ornamentation in gold or jewels is now the most stylish. From a famous Colonial pattern the smart shops of the world's fashion centers are now showing this handsome pattern in real shell at very high prices, and while this Comb is not real Tortoise Shell, it looks the same, wears as well and cannot be distinguished from the higher cost article. Each one is four inches wide and three inches deep, the teeth are of good length and finely finished, keeping the Comb always firmly in place.

Our exact illustration so well conveys the appearance of this Comb that our description will not aid in conveying to you its attractiveness, and if you would be carefully dressed, and your hair properly ornamented, you will have us send you one or more of these Combs. On account of there being seven crowns many call it the "Good Luck" comb, bringing good luck to the wearer.

IS A MOST MARVELOUS IN-

FRE TREATENT

To The Sick and Ailing Everywhere TO YOU IT IS OFFERED FREE

To the sick and suffering—to every man—to every woman in poor health, this offer is made—made in the absolute faith and sincere belief that my treatment will cure you and lift you up again to perfect health and vigor. I have a right to ask you to believe what I say—to have faith in my treatment, because thousands and thousands of grateful cured patients prove my word—prove the virtue of my treatment. I don't ask you to believe me. I don't ask you to believe them. Doubt if you wish. Wise men doubt, but only fools refuse to be convinced.

I Want a Chance to Convince You

I want to give you positive proof, convincing evidence. I want to remove all doubt—all question—all suspicion—all lack of faith—and I want to pay the cost of this proof—all of it—to the very last penny myself.

I have put my life into this work—I hold the record of thousands of cures—not "some better"—but thousands of desperate sufferers hearty and strong and big and well; and their letters are in my hands to prove every word I say.

No matter how you are, no matter what your affliction, I will have the remedies sent to you and given into your own hands free, paid for by me and delivered at my own cost.

These remedies have cured thousands of cases—nearly every disease—and they do cure and I believe they will cure you—make you well—and bring you back to health and the joy of living!

Let Me Send You a Free Treatment

Will you let me do this for you—will you let me prove it—brother and sister sufferers? Are you willing to trust a master physician who not only makes this offer but publishes it and then sends the test and proof of his remedies without a penny of cost to any one except himself?

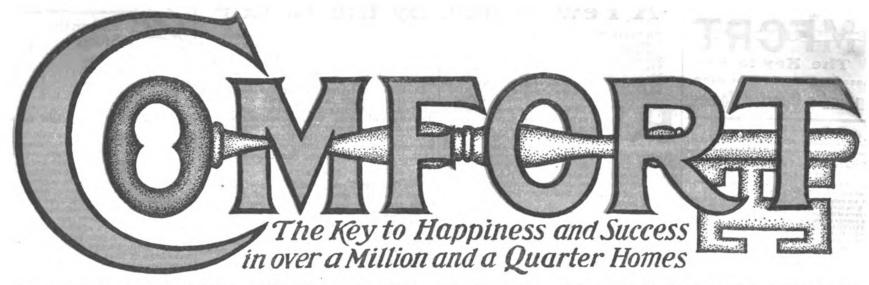

Nearly a million people in every civilized country on earth have accepted this offer. Not one has cause to regret it.

Send me your name, post office address and a description of your condition, and I will do all in my power to satisfy every doubt you have or can have that these remedies will restore you to health.

Tell me how you feel and the proof treatment is yours at my cost. No bills of any kind—no papers to sign—no obligation to buy—nothing but my absolute good will and good faith.

DR. JAMES W. KIDD, Box 1193, FORT WAYNE, IND.

NOTE: Our readers should take advantage of this liberal offer. We know Dr. Kidd and know his methods to be fair and honest.

Longfellow's centennial has once more drawn Longfellow's centennial has once more drawn attention to America's favorite poet, and current magazines are filled with articles touching upon the life and work of one, who will ever be dear to the American heart. It has been fashionable of late to criticise Longfellow; some even have gone so far as to say that he did not write poetry at all, but merely rhymed prose. This is cheap criticism of the same sort that has been hurled at Dickens, and all other men who have appealed more to the people's that has been hurled at Dickens, and all other men who have appealed more to the people's hearts, than to their brains. Longfellow's verse is beautiful in its simplicity, even a child can understand it. To understand Browning, societies have to meet, and guess what he means, without ever knowing exactly what he does mean. We need no Longfellow societies to boost his work, or to delve into the mysteries of his verse, and search for hidden meanings. True greatness consists in one's ability to win the love of one's fellow men, and this Longfellow succeeded in doing, as no other poet ever has done.

Children for countless generations, will, in their school days learn "The Wreek of the Hesperus," "Excelsior," "Hiawatha," and "The Psalm of Life." It is doubtful if anything will ever replace these poems in the hearts of the people. Longfellow's popularity is even greater in England than it is here, and it is a great shock to the English youths, when they discover Longfellow is an American and not an Englishman. for he is the poet of the sober not an Englishman, for he is the poet of the sober English nature, and doubtless would have been made poet Laureate had he been born in Britain. made poet Laureate had he been born in Britain. His spotless life, and noble, beautiful character, made a deep impression upon the times in which he lived. Longfellow's critics will pass away, and be forgotten, but Henry Wadsworth Longfellow will go down the ages, loved more and more by each succeeding generation.

Thomas Edison, the electrical wizard, and king of inventors, celebrated his sixtieth birthday recently, and upon that occasion he made this remark: "We don't know anything, probably in 500 years, we shall have collected enough data to suspect." The world ought to thank Thomas Edison for this remark, for the world of today is a very conceited one. We have got into the habit of believing that the people of this century are strictly "It," and we think we know everything, or nearly everything, and that there is very little left to find out. As a matter of fact, we are only on the out. As a matter of fact, we are only on the threshold of knowledge, and have only begun to peer into the wonderland of science, of threshold of knowledge, and have only begun to peer into the wonderland of science, of which centuries hence we may begin to know something worth while. At present we see as through a glass darkly, and peer into the Unknown, and surmise and guess, guess and surmise, and that is as far as we get. We are still in the Kindergarten class, mere infants grappling with the A. B. C. of knowledge, and it will be many centuries hence before mankind quits groping in the dark and graduates into the light, and can say "The riddle of the Universe is solved, I have passed through the unknown, and now I know what knowledge and wisdom mean." We must grope through the centuries until that day comes, and many an Edison, many a Marconi, many a Kelvin will have to be born, and lend their genius to investigation and experiment, and grapple with mighty problems and bring to light forces and powers of which we at present in our wildest dreams cannot conseive, before mankind can begin to pat himself on the back, and say, "Now I really know something." We are very big people in our own estimation, but the people who will live one hundred years hence, will look back upon this age with contempt, and regard us as little better than savages. There is all the more reason therefore, that we should strive and delve and do our best in our particular sphere, so that the time that must lapse between ignorance and knowledge may be shortened, and man may enter into the heritage of knowledge and wisdom, which God Almighty intended to be his.

The Dry Farming Congress, attended by representatives of sixteen states, lately met in Denver, to discuss the most feasible and practical methods for bringing under cultivation of the semi-avid regions. Dry uplands of the semi-arid regions. farming enthusiasts claim, that even in the foothills of the Rockies, farming can be carried on, and certain kinds of crops raised. The dry farm plan is this: The surface of the ground is thoroughly pulverized, and a dust blanket is thus secured, and this dust blanket readily absorbe and retains all maisture. readily absorbs and retains all moisture. The farmers plan to keep all the rainfall on the land, instead of letting it evaporate, or on the land, instead of letting it evaporate, or run into the streams and rivers, which in turn convey it to the ocean. Dry farmers claim that a full crop can be secured every two years, if the present rainfall, which is above the average, is maintained in the semi-arid section. The Government will shortly establish ex-periment stations in this region. From these, periment stations in this region. From these, the dry farmers will learn what crops are liable to grow best under the conditions which will obtain in these elevated areas. The fact that the Government has taken up this matter, goes to prove that the dry farming advocates have a fair assurance of success. Had any attempt to prove that the dry farming advocates have a fair assurance of success. Had any attempt been made to raise crops in this region a few years ago, such attempts would have been pooh poohed as ridiculous and impossible. Science is ever making the impossible, possible, and the upland plains may yet produce good crops, and add to the national wealth. The Government Bureau is of the opinion that the climate of the high plains has not materially changed, and so the present rainfall may be succeeded by seasons of drought. Day farming is at present in the experimental stages, and the matter had best be approached cautionsly, ere one listens too readily to the optimistic views of those who have land to sell in the semi-arid

The Cleveland public schools are going to adopt some very sensible methods of education. Girls are to be taught how to sweep, cook, economize in household expenses, how to make their own clothing, take care of babies, and how to care for the sick, so that in the future years, when their husbands and children have spell of illness, they will know how to nurse a spell of illness, they will know how to nurse them properly.

Professor Hicks who is at the head of this movement says: "The average girl who marries nowadays is utterly ignorant of the duties the average man expects her to perform as his wife. She knows nothing of cooking usually, she must be taught how to care for an invalid, she must learn how to care for babies. Thousands of children are daily sacrificed during the hot summer days to motherly ignorance."

In New York City, a trained nurse has been placed in each public school, and the wretched physical condition of many of the children prove the intense ignorance of the majority of parents. In many cases the nurses have inter-physical condition of many of the children prove the intense ignorance of the majority of parents. In many cases the nurses have interviewed the mothers, and instructed them as to how to care for their children. Very often children are sent to school afflicted with various diseases and ailments, which owe their origin to neglect and ignorance, as much as to lack of proper care and nourishment. Women struggling with poverty, living in filthy tenements, into many of the rooms of which the sunlight never enters, cannot be expected to have much knowledge of hygiene, sanitation, diet, and the laws governing health.

Education should be practical, for its main object is to fit children for the life in which they are to enter. We find children with a smattering of Latin, and the classics, who cannot handle a needle or prepare a simple meal. We are what we eat. Good cooking usually means good digestion, and the banishing of dyspepsia and its kindred allments, and the culinary art should be taught to every girl in the land. Latin can be dispensed with, but we cannot get along without well-cooked meals.

The care of the home, and domestic science should be taught to every child. It is ignorance of domestic science that makes the care of the home irksome and tiresome to many of our young matrons. The girl who has had a proper home training, under a good mother of the

Such a woman, with very little training could run almost any business, and run it successfully. Whatever else is taught in school, of one thing we are positive, nothing will aid so much to make this a healthy, happy, contented nation, as teaching domestic science. We trust that other states domestic science. We trust that other states will follow the example the public schools of Cleveland have set in this matter, and if they do, happier homes and fewer divorces will be

A Dinner of Odd Guests

"Possibly you don't know it," said the man who knows a lot about the giving of dinners in New York to distinguished people, "but the number of applications that are sant in for invitations are simply astounding. There are grounds for some of them—a peasan who should be invited may have been everlooked, or for some reason an invitation was not sent where it should have gons—but mest of them come from people who have no claim whatever to be invited to such affairs. Where the dinner is to be so much per plate, a little laxity is permitted and not a few are invited who wouldn't have been if they had not applied. But what right has a man to ask to be invited to a dinner given at the cost of someone else, yet they do it, just the same, and on that hangs the thread of my story. A year or so ago a friend of mine who has money enough to entertain as high as a hundred people at a dinner of honor to some prominent guest, and frequently gives dinners of from twenty to fifty covers, concluded, on the suggestion of a Stock Exchange practical joker, to announce a dinner to a certain man of prominence, who is a joker himself. It was to be a hundred-plate dinner, the guests to include business men, officials and professional men. Announcements were made three weeks in advance, but no invitations were sent. The dinner giver had another object in view. By the end of the first week he had fifty applicamen. Announcements were made three weeks in advance, but no invitations were sent. The dinner giver had another object in view. By the end of the first week he had fifty applications. Invitations were promptly sent to all of these. By the end of the second week he had about eight-five more. You see the invites had been talking about the dinner to their friends, though it is not probable that they told how they secured their invitations. By the middle of the third week twenty-five more came in. A hundred and sixty in all. Then the dinner giver wanted to quit, but the other two men were for carrying it to a finish, even going so far as to agree to pay all expenses, but the other man wouldn't have it, and he became suddenly and dangerously ill. At least, it was so reported, and the dinner was called off. I really think the man should have gone on with it, and when he had that bunch of self-invited guests at the festal board he should have amused them by telling them how they happened to be there. It might not have been very agreeable, possibly, to any of them, but what a useful lesson it might have been."

The State of the Case

"Once upon a time," said the drummer for a New York house, "I used to live in the suburbs of the big town, just as a good many do who can't afford the high rents of the metropolis, and I used to get home at all sorts of hours. One night I came in about twelve o'clock, and I took the back way for a short cut. It brought me through a part of my lot I had devoted to chicken culture, and there I caught a darky who was well known about the town, but not for his strict honesty, though he was not a real 'bad nigger.' Naturally enough, I asked him what he was doing there at that hour. 'Deed, boss,' said he, shaking in his shoes, 'I dunno. I reckon mebbe l'se walkin' in my sleep.' I objected to that explanation and called for something more explanatory. 'Deed, boss, I'se so plump skeert to death dat I'se speechless. 'Deed I is.' That wouldn't go either, and after more talk I told him at last unless he told me what he was doing there I would turn him over to the police. This was his chance, and he chuckled after the darky manner. 'Deed, boss,' he explained glibly, 'I ain't doin' nuffin'. Nuffin a-tall, boss. But ef you hadn't come erlong jis' es you did, I spect I'd a done sumpin' er other to some o' dem pullets o' your'n caze dey's pow'ful fat an' juicy jis' erbout now. A Lady Town

"What I like to see," said a gallant gentleman with a flower in his buttonhole and an odor of violets on his handkerchief, "is the ladies bossing the push. The ladies, God bless 'em, can do no wrong. Wherever they run things you can bet—but you mustn't let them know you are gambling—that everything will be done according to Hoyle—I apologize; Hoyle was a man. I mean Mrs. Hoyle. Now there is the town of East Clarion, Ohio, for example. The post-office is in charge of Miss Nellie Cleator, as charming and accomplished a girl as ever lived. Then the public schools are conducted by Mrs. Anne Mawson, a delightful matron, with all lady teachers. The church choir, in which there is never a row, is led by Mrs. Eva Armstrong, with all lady voices. Need I say the fair leader is a bird, as are her associates? The superintendent of the Sunday school is Mrs. Nellie Hale, and everyone of her scholars has wings sprouting. The Shaw Hotel—I paid my bill there, like a gentleman—is conducted by Mrs. Physbe Shaw to the Queen's taste. There hasn't been a man doctor in town for by Mrs. Pheebe Shaw to the Queen's taste. There hasn't been a man doctor in town for years, and the husbands of such ladies as have those incumbrances are skilled in housework and can wallop a dishrag around a skillet almost as gracefully as if they had been born that way.

"Here's to the ladies! At first the Creator

But now they are greater."

It is one of the precautionary measures that hedge about the lives of the two foremost men hedge about the lives of the two foremost men in the National Government, the idea being that, if an accident upon the rail should cause the death of one of the illustrious men, the other would still be spared to the country. It was for this reason that ex-President Cleveland invariably rode upon the Pennsylvana Railway when he journeyed from the capital to Philadelphia or New York, and Vice-President Stevenson traveled by the Baltimore and Ohio

Hammocks made of white Indian head with lawn ruffles are very dainty and can be easily laundered by removing the rods and cords. For use in very warm climates coarse lace or net can be used for the sides.

Striped tickings trimmed with solid colors are durable, and especially desirable where the lessening of work is an object.

Another advantage in having a hammock baby-tender, is that baby can be wrapped up as little or much as is necessary to suit the atmosphere. For warm weather fold and lay in only a light quilt, then a little sheet, the tiny pillow, and after baby is in, some light covering and a mosquito net if necessary.

HOME-MADE HAMMOCK FOR BABY.

For a baby of this sort, a hammock makes a most desirable bed, in it he can take his naps in the open air until September or October, when the weather is not stormy. Besides the healthfulness of sleeping out of doors, which acts like a tonic, a baby will sleep much longer for often if he stirs and begins to waken he can be turned over to give him a change of position, and the hammock getting a gentle stir rocks him off into the land of Nod again.

This gives a tired mother a chance for rest and also work, for in the summer months there is much which can be done in the open where one can have the benefit of fresh air and re-

In the winter it is also a blessing, for it can be easily hung to screw hooks or big nails anywhere, at any angle, across a corner of a room out of draughts. There baby is safe and there are no rockers to stumble over.

All that is needed to make one, which will be better for this purpose in every way, than a ready-made one is two and one half yards of ticking, duck, Indian head or any other material which is similar and equally strong. DEAR SISTERS ONE AND ALL:

Mrs. C. E. Stewart, Hill City, Kans., also suggests the following to be applied externally:

Kate Jackson, Lawton, R. F. D., 1, Okla., makes a good suggestion. She writes: "Blacking my kitchen stove brings to mind a grievance I have wanted to share for sometime. Is there any special need of all the nickle plate and rough places, excepting to increase a woman's work? Not only stoves but many other things we use seem especially designed to catch dirt and make extra work. Can't we busy wives and mothers start a crusade and refuse, as far as we can, to buy such articles? A few hints to manufacturers will go a long way, for if we create a demand, they will make haste to supply it. When we look at furniture with all the carvings, which I am pleased to say is fast "going out," at glassware which requires a brush to clean the crevices, at china with its rough surface and square corners, we discover some of the things that create unnecessary nerve wear. Let dealers know that you prefer plainer things.

She also inquires if any sister knows of the cause or any relief for a dull ache or pain under the left shoulder blade.

I have received so much information from these letters that I will try to return the favor.

From Washington comes this: For many years this interesting magazine has been a welcome visitor in our family. A week shead the children begin to count the days until Comport comes. Then it is in the hand of someone cused from the table because of eagerness to finish the last story.

Ours is a busy life. We are ranchers in Okanogan County. For sixteen years we have lived on the banks of this sluggish stream and longed for the coming of the off-promised railroad which will bring us closer to the outside world and furnish a certain market for our produce. However, there are many pleasures connected with such a life. Except in case of accidents, of which we have had our share, the visit of a doctor is unusual, he would have quite a ride as our community is thinly settled. State land lies on one side and across the river is the Colville Indian Reservation.

We enjoy to the fullest the delights of boating and fishing. The head of our family being a good shot our table is frequently supplied with choice game. This season we have had four large geese, twenty ducks, and perhaps thirty prairie chickens. I especially enjoy the needlework department as I embroider, crochet, knit and often receive helpful ideas. I have a large family to care for but would be pleased to hear from any of the readers and will try to answer all letters.

MRS. H. DEFFLAND, Ophir, Wash.

I notice in a back number, that J. A. D. thinks it best for people to sell what they have when moving to a new place. As I have received numerous requests for remedies for superfluous hair, the following from sister Jane may prove valuable:

Mix Sulphide Calcium with water to make a paste, apply with a wooden knife, leave on a couple of minutes and remove with wooden knife. Then wash with warm water and rub sweet oil into the skin. Repeat once a week.

Should the Sulphide be too strong add to it a very little starch. Do not leave on too long as it is powerful.

As consumption and rheumatism are so prevalent these remedies sent in by Mrs. W. H. Simmons, Iantha, Mo., may be welcome.

Cure for Consumption

Common yellow dock root boiled in porcelain kettle until it looks like strong tea: then sweeten with honey and take two or three tablespoonfuls three times a day or more according to the way it affects the bowels. Take as much as you can. It is a good blood purifier and cannot possibly hurt.

Cure for Rhoumatism

A little German sister, who is evidently neat herself and wishes to help out with the spring cleaning, writes:

We have a good little home and three children, a girl and two boys. I enjoy housework, reading and fancy work. I always read all the letters and stories in this dear little magazine.

As the spring is here, the time is near for a general upheaval and thorough cleaning; maybe someone would like my recipe for good soft soap.

Take two gallons of water (soft water is best), three pounds of washing soda and nine bars of any kind of common yellow soap. Shave the soap up fine and put this and the water in a wash boiler on the stove. Let it simmer for an hour, stir and then pour in one pint of ammonia and cover up airtight.

I should be pleased to hear from any of the sisters and will try to answer all letters.

brighten what would, perhaps, be a dull spot. To illustrate this I want to tell you all of a stranger's kindness to me.

Once, some years ago, I was in Springfield, Mass., from Saturday until Monday, as I could not reach my destination by Saturday night.

I was unused to traveling and as I sat alone in the station, heartily wishing myself back in my quiet Vermont home, a lady who sat beside me spoke, asking if she could not assist me, and I told her of my plight. Then she suggested that her friend who was with her see me to a good hotel, and added, "I am just starting on a journey, otherwise I would gladly ask you to my home." Now my friends, can you realize how much good that simple act did me? Her friend accompanied me to the hotel. The next day she called, thus cheering what would otherwise have been a long, lonely day. I have never forgotten the act; it taught me a lesson, and since then I have tried to be more thoughtful of others, and never let a chance for a little act of kindness pass by.

I should like to hear from any of the Comfort sisters and to receive papers or magazines, which when read I will pass along.

To change the subject, I wonder how many of you do up your crocheted doilies as I do.

Wash, and starch them in boiled starch and then pin them out upon something firm; like a table or a board, and let them dry that way; they will then be firm, no iron need be used. Care must be taken to pin them in perfect shape. Just try it, sisters, and see if it won't pay you for the trouble.

Has anyone a pattern for crocheted mittens? All I see are knitted, and I do not knit.

I wish the sisters who can would remember me with letters through May, in honor of my boy's birth month.

Ind., visits us again, with a word for mothers.

DEAR COMFORT MOTHERS:

I want to say a few words to you. I know how natural it is for each to think our own all right or nearly so, and of course, we each have a right to our opinions. However, I have been around considerably and in a great many homes and have often noticed that parents make such a sad mistake in letting their little ones run free, here and there with very little guidance. Of course, there are mothers and mothers, but many of them, too many, make this mistake until it is too late and the little ones have heard and been taught things which they will never forget.

My first word of warning is, keep your children with you or know who they are with, and as they grow older teach them to rightly choose their own companions.

I have much more to say but will wait till next time.

Dear Mrs. Wilkinson and Comfort Sisters:

I am a reader of Comfort, and find much help in its columns.

I am a farmer's wife, have been on the farm all my life, and really like farm life better than any other, or at least I imagine I do, for I mever lived in the city.

I have been married twenty-seven years last New Year's day. I have eight children, six boys and two girls, ranging in ages from five to twenty-five. I am not very healthy, but I try not to complain. When I read of so many more who are in a worse condition than I am, I feel thankful that I am as well off as I am. I have asthma and a very bad cough, but still I am up most of the time, but cannot go about much, any exposure makes my cough worse, and brings on a spell of asthma. If any of the sisters know of anything to relieve asthma I would be very thankful to hear of it for I begin to think there is no cure for it.

I certainly enjoy the fancy work and quilt patterns. I do a great deal of drawnwork, and have gotten most of my patterns from Comfort.

I feel sorry for the poor unfortunate shut-ins. It seems hard to be shut in from all the heauties of the world, but we all have our share of sickness and trials. Still every cloud has a silver lining if we will only look on the bright side. I think sometimes I have been wonderfully blest, but still I complain. I have never lost a member of my family, and was never at the burial of a relative (except my mother when I was small), and am now forty-five years old. Don't you think I should be thankful even if I am sick now most of the time?

I was born and lived in Mississippi. I have been in Arkansas thirteen years, and if any of my old friends in Mississippi happen to read this I hope they will write me. I have so relatives in Arkansas that I know of so I will appreciate and answer any and all letters. Mass. S. D. Watts, Bryant, Ark.

that I know of so I will appreciate and answer any and all letters. Mrs. S. D. Watts, Bryant, Ark.

Dear Comport Sisters:

I live three miles south of Elmo, Texas. I have four children, the oldest a boy of eight years. My husband is a farmer. We both enjoy country life much better than city life. I enjoy raising chickens and having a good garden, although I do get lonely sometimes. I have not visited much this year only the sick, as the children have not been well. I can truly sympathize with all who have lost loved ones. I had to part with a dear sister two years ago, but we shall meet to part no more by and by. I have two brothers and one sister living and a dear mother. My husband has three sisters, two brothers and a dear mother living, but he also has lost loved ones.

Sisters, I do think we should do all in our power to make everyone we can happy. Just a little kind word or little kind deed each day. Make the road for old folks light and pleasant, for it won't be long ere we will all be called to go over the same road. Of course, we all or most of us, get fretted at times and say little words that we regret afterwards, but God is just and if we repent He will forgive. I cannot go to church much on account of sickness and the distance, but I try to do as near right as I know.

Will the sisters who can, write to me? All the letters will be highly appreciated and I will answer all who send stamps. All send photographs who can.

I could not do without Compost; it certainly is a MRS. EMILY UPTON, Box 15, Elmo, R. F. D., 3, Texas.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:
I have taken so much comfort in reading the sisters' letters, and the many other things of interest with which Comfort is filled from beginning sisters' letters, and the many other things of interest with which Comfort is filled from beginning to end, that I felt I was getting more than my due unless I could contribute something myself, so will tell you how to pass the long hours by making a rug, which will also use up some of the old clothes which are not fit for anything else.

Take two strips of wood about one inch by two, and as long as you want your rug, and two pieces of the same as wide as you want it. Tack the corners together to form a square, now drive some shingle or lathe nails in the short pieces as close as you can drive them together, get some colored warp and pass from first nail on one stick to first on the other until all are provided with warp, then take your rags, tear one half inch wide, thread on tape needle, and pass first under and then top of warp until you reach other side, and then back like darning, alternating the over and under, and push rags up tight to make firm. You can make stripe on ends and middle hit-or-miss, or as you choose, and sew rags in lengths or balls as any carpet rags if wished, and finish with fringe of the warp.

I have little to do, and it would help brighten the dull spring days to receive letters. I would enjoy hearing from the sisters. I have raised four children; one died as he was entering manhood, and the others have gone into the world for themselves, and new I am lonely.

I have lived in St. Louis, Mo., Wisconsin, and Michigan. I came here because my children preferred the East, but I often long for old Michigan. There is no place like home.

Mrs. JNO. C. STICKLER, Cincinnati, R. F. D., 3, Iowa.

Iowa. DEAR SISTERS:

DEAR SISTERS:

Will you welcome a stranger and sister from this far-off country, The Pan Handle of Texas?

In reading these pages we get descriptions of the East. West, North and South. I will claim the middle, and try to tell you something of this part of the country. The Pan Handle was once the Stake Plains, so called from having to drive stakes into the ground to guide the traders across the plains.

I want to say a few words to you. I know how natural it is for each to think our own all right or nearly so, and of course, we each have a right to our opinions. However, I have been around considerably and in a great many homes and have often noticed that parents make such a sad mistake in letting their little ones run free, here are mothers and mothers, but many of them too many, make this mistake until it is too late and the little ones have heard and been taught things which they will never forget.

My first word of warning is, keep your children with you or know who they are with, and as they grow older teach them to rightly choose their own companions.

A common fault and the cause of many unhappy homes is carelessness. Many women go out and then rush home and only have time to half do everything, meals are hurriedly cooked and served, children tired and dirty, everything in an upset. The father comes in, and no matter how good a disposition he has, soon he is cross as a bear, and is it any wonder? Then it is that hop or children are liable to be punished for the fault of the mother.

I have known many such mothers, women who lieve that their place is in the home above all things. Devote your best efforts toward making it a true home. Teach the children to homor their parents and love and revere God, observe the Sabbath day and keep it holy and they will rise up and call you blessed. Oh, mothers, how important is your work, do not slight it for anything else.

I have much more to say but will wait till next time.

As the years go by we should like to write to everyone of you, but that is an impossibility only through Comport.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS:

I wrote a letter about two years ago, and was kindly admitted to the corner, and received letters from some of the sisters. I made a friend of Mrs. R. J. Boisacg, Chicago. In this letter I will tell year all how I manage to make a little pin money.

I purchase remnants of satin and velvet at any dry goods store counter. These I make into sofe pillows and fancy articles, painting designs of different kinds on top of pillows, finishing up with a cord or ruffle. Some very attractive pillows I made were red satin painted with pond-lilies, white velvet in American beauty roses sprays. I get quite a snug sum of money from the sale of pillows alone. Then there are the lovely handmade laces which are now so much in vogue. I purchase braids and thread and with some good pattern to follow it is comparatively easy to fashion dainty neckwear, cuffs, revers, berthas, and other articles too numerous to mention. I have also embroidered some and taught music. As I only live in a small place I think that other needleworkers could do as well if they tried. If your talents do not lie in these directions try your hand at whatever you can do best. I know by experience one can accomplish a great deal by utilizing spare moments. Our good magazine continues to bring all kinds of helps and hints monthly to our aid. The stories are fine. St. Elmo is excellent. One can learn many lessons from the characters in this grand story. The Stolen Proposal I especially enjoyed. Jerry the Backwoods Boy is getting more interest. Jerry the Backwoods Boy is getting more interest. I want to hear from any and all of you. I will try to answer all letters or cards. Who will send recipes for ice cream (cooked), proportioned to make one gallon of cream? I want to send a little verse to all who were born in February, the month of my birth.

"The February born will find Sincerity and peace of mind, Freedom from passion and from care If they the Amethyst will wear."

Gene Warfield asks himself why a woman of Mrs. Ross-byn's Puritanic strength of character should embrace the Catholic faith. "Is if for this, is me to be separated from the object of my dearest desire?" The sound of voices chanting the Ave Maria is borne to his waiting ears, Theta Rosslyn meets her lover. CHAPTER VII.

A BACKWARD GLIMPSE AT THE OLD HOME-STEAD.

With merry shouts and many good bys the boys and girls trooped away. Theta's face kept its bright smile until the last child disappeared, then a weary look came into her sad, dark eyes as she passed up the village street.

"If only mother were well," she sighed anxiously to herself, "how happy I should be. It is hard that I must be away from her all day, shut up in the schoolroom, but needs must when necessity drives. Her long illness has taken all my carnings and the burden of has taken all my earnings, and the burden of the mortgage presses harder and harder. If it were not for Mrs. Warfield I scarcely know what I should do. There she is now, coming out of the post-office. A saint, if there ever was one. Mrs. Warfield!" raising her voice, "wait for me a minute!"

Mrs. Warfield halted, and the two ground each other tenderly.

"A letter from Gene," Mrs. Warfield said, as thick white envelope, "and it she held up a thick white envelope, "and it feels as though there were cards inside—I suppose something new he has been getting out since he became a Congressman."

"Why not open it and see?" said Theta, with "No, dear—not worse—and I shall be better—a fleeting glance at the envelope, the wellknown writing on which, brought a blush to her wild-rose face.

malign influence being exerted over my boy, and the thought of it gives me no peace night or day."

For a moment they regarded each other in sorrowful silence, then Theta spoke:

"The same thought has been torturing me ever since I read of Gene's election to Congress. My heart thrilled with pride even as yours did, as I read of his manly life all the years he has been out West, and how he had arrayed himself against the forces of evil, but there was one part of the article I did not like. It ran something like this: 'It is a significant fact.' Boss Corcoran threw all the weight of his power on the side of Warfield, thus assuring his election.' I fear that man Corcoran—I hear nothing but evil of him—and I fear his influence over Gene."

"Theta," Mrs. Warfield replied, a sob rising in her throat, and tears standing in her eyes, "I love my boy, and I have pride in his achievement, yet great as is my love, I would rather he had died in his infancy than he should live to sell his birthright—the birthright of his noble manhood—for the praise of false golds." She stopped suddenly, cobse tooking her, while Theta, too, was visibly moved. At last, commanding her voice the girl said:

"I believe the time is coming when there will be no more temptations such as these to beset the path of youth. I believe the time is

I believe the time is not far distant when the dollar mark, and what its aggregate represents—power—will no longer be our national emblem. As for power, she can't have more than she now has. Does he hear the carriages? She fears tongues now has. Does he hear the carriages? She fears tongues on he. Occoran visits Warfeld. She was consciouse of her power to sway men and it was not thus, cold and dispassionate, they were accustomed to stand before her. While she resented his attitude with all her coquette heart, her words bore no hint of this as she replied softly: "I will be your wife; I will not only be glad but proud to grow great beneath your shadow."

"Yes, Mrs. Warfield, I am no longer the simple girl who sent Gene away. But here we are at my own door," she added, with a sudden change of manner, the flush dying away and leaving her pale, "let us hasten to mother."

Softly they entered the house.

Maggie's strong, capable hands were arranging the pillows, and making the invalid more comfortable as the two pushed open the

"I'm glad ye've come, Miss Theta," whispered Maggie, in the girl's ear, "yer mother's been longin' for the sight of yer sweet face."

Theta nodded in answer, and going to the bed bent over and pressed a kiss on her mother's brow, then started back as its marble coldness struck a chill to her young lips.

"Mother darling, are you in pain?"

The worn face on the pillow brightened.
"No dear. All pain has left me, and I feel stronger than I have for a long time."

A little cry of joy broke from Theta.

"Mrs. Warfield, do you hear that? Mother

At that moment Mrs. Warfield did not know

The invalid closed her eyes.

"Yes, dear, I shall be—well—soon." For a time there was silence, then her eyes opened and grew large and unnaturally bright.

"Yes, mother?"

"I want you to send the priest to me."
"The priest!" with a startled glance at the ghastly face.

"Yes, dear. Mrs. Warfield will stay with me while you are gone. And don't be in any hurry to come back for I want to be alone with him a long time. I cannot have you killing yourself for me the way you have been doing. Go up into the hills for a long walk and mind you, bring back some roses in those pale cheeks." The speaking exhausted her and her breath came in panting gasps.

"Are you sure—quite sure you are not worse, mother?"
"No, dear—not worse—and I shall be better—

Theta watched until be had passed out of sight then turned and climbed the hill to the old trysting tree.

The leaves lay in scattered confusion on the ground, the wind crooned a weird melody among the bare branches of the old elm. In the west the clouds were piling up in barbaric pearl and gold. The crows flew over the valley cawing dismally, no other sound breaking the silence.

Theta stood musing, old thoughts and memories stirring within her, then she stretched out her arms, her sweet face filled with a yearning tenderness.

"Gene, my darling," she murmured passionately, "how long I have waited for you! How many times I have peered down that lonely road—and looked for you in vain. Will you come no more? How long, sweetheart, will you stay away? Would that I had never sent you—that I had kept you always here beside me. It was here I felt your love-words go over me like a flood. Come back to me, my dearest, by the power of my love I bid you come back to me!" As the last, low-spoken words dropped from her lips, the strong varning which had filled Theta for so significant to be let to guests for use on the flowers and table decorations, the hostess having no responsibility. Under such circumstances enter-daming becomes a pleasure instead of a burden. Being fresh and rested I could play the part of hostess having in responsibility. As the last, low-spoken words dropped from her lips, the strong yearning which had filled Theta for so long, found expression in the will to call Gene up before her in the actual flesh and blood. She grew pale as the dead as she put forth all the power of her soul, her lips breathing the one word, "Come!"

one word, "Come!"

Then suddenly she saw him standing in a high place staring with abstracted gaze at a tumbling mass of waters below. Theta's face was transfigured with love and tenderness, then suddenly it changed, darkened, and the lovelight died as she saw at his side the figure of a lovely woman who touched him on the arm and spoke light words in his ear.

Gene was standing on the high bridge at Niagara, looking down at the swirling waters, when suddenly, he became conscious of a presence and as plainly as though she had in verity been standing beside him he saw the form of Theta—saw the wild-rose face, and the tenderness of her eyes, and the anguish which crept into them as Victoria uttered the words:

"If you look at the waters longer, Gene, you will hypnotize yourself and take the mad dive, which would be a pity. for you'd leave behind which would be a pity, for you'd leave behind you a very charming young widow."

Theta's hands clutched at her breast and a cry of agony broke from her. "My God! He is married!"

See first page illustration.

She threw out her arms, reeled and fell at the foot of the tree. Hours afterward the searchers found her there, and conveyed her to the home of Mrs. Warfield raving in the deliri-um of brain fever. Long before she arose from the bed of pain her mother had been laid to rest in the churchyard on the billeide to rest in the churchyard on the hillside.

IN THE RAPIDS ABOVE THE CATARACT.

It was while they were at Niagara Gene and Victoria took stock of ways and means and discussed future housekeeping plans.

They were in their private apartment and Victoria, clad in a charming negligee, was perched on the arm of Gene's chair listening while he discoursed at length, stooping occasionally, as is the way of the newly wed, to punctuate his remarks. This punctuation was accomplished in various ways. Sometimes it was by means of a caress on a rosy ear, some was by means of a caress on a rosy ear, some-times by a kiss on a white neck, sometimes— but no matter—those remarks were well punctuated.

"Dearest," Gene was saying softly, "after all those years in boarding-houses it will seem the Deareding to have a home of my own. I fear feel like Paradise to have a home of my own it will not be a very grand one, not the home I should like to provide for you. Your beauty demands rich surroundings and just the right setting is necessary to bring out the lustrous richness of this lovely curling hair," pulling setting is necessary to bring out the lustrous richness of this lovely curling hair," pulling out the pins as he spoke and letting it down in a shining mass on her shoulders, she permitting him to tousle it as he would, for admiration was the very breath of life to this woman, "but I am afraid my means will not allow me to give you what I wish. However, I have saved something from my law practice and we can at least start comfortably. We will have a house all to ourselves on a quiet street," Victoria shuddered, "and we will have furnishings good of their kind and brightly dark and ings good of their kind and brightly dark and when, wearied by official duties, I come home to find you sitting by the fireside, your sewing on your lap, and waiting for me—ah!" he broke off, "will it not be heaven to you as to me, dear?"

"Horrors!" she thought. "He expects me to be domestic. As for sewing—I detest it!" Aloud she said, her brow clearing and no hint of the secret vexation she felt perceptible, in of the secret vexation she felt perceptible, in her voice:

"The picture you have drawn, Gene, is a pretty one, especially my sitting by the hearth sewing," laughing as she said this; "it has something very alluring about it, but at the same time the whole thing has much to be said in its disfavor: In that small house on a quiet street," mimicking his tone, "I should only this strong seria quiet street," mimicking his tone, "I should only this strong seria ning in COMFORT.

thelp,' and when you came home expecting to find a bright little woman to entertain you, I should be so tired, irritated and depressed I couldn't do it, and it would end in our both being miserable."

Victoria paused to let the effect of this sink into Gene's mind and it was all she expected for his face was a picture of dismay:

"Surely you don't wish us to spend our lives in a hotel, Victoria? It will be necessary for us to entertain to a certain extent—"

"Of course it will." she interrupted. "and do you know,"she continued, the smile dying, and a grave look coming into her eyes, "lately I positively dread to open Gene's letters. Not but they are just as tender, in fact they are more so than they used to be, but there is something about them which worries me. Dear, you have come to be so much to me, I can say to you what I would not utter to another living soul. Theta, there is some malign influence being exerted over my boys, and the thought of it gives me no peace night or day."

The priest was not at the parish house, but they are the church instructing some new altar boys in their duties. She delivered her message and would have returned with him but he laid a restraining touch on her arm.

"No, child, your mother will have much to say to me and we must be alone. Do as she machinery runs as smoothly as clockwork, and the thought of it gives me no peace night or day."

Theta watched until he had passed out of sight then turned and climbed the hill to the old trysting tree.

unable to resist.

"That is a consideration which is certainly worth thinking about," he said laughing and putting his arm around her, "but," he added somewhat gravely, "the question is, can we afford it? You know, dear, I shall have no income outside of my official salary."

A glint of steel came into Victoria's eyes, as, for an instant, she regarded him intently, but there was something almost of a feline quality in her voice when she asked softly:

"Are there not perquisites that go with the office?"

and a pained light came into Gene's eyes. His lips tightened and he took his arm away suddenly as he replied almost sternly:

"Not for me. I sold myself but not for gold. I shall never touch a penny that does not rightly belong to me."

Victoria's face grew dark with anger and she said within herself: "What a fool he is. But there—I must stroke him softly and he shall yet do my bidding." Aloud she spoke in tones which were gentle, almost humble:

"You are so unlike the average man, Gene, and I ought not to have spoken as I did. Pardon me for mentioning such a thing."

"I pardon you!" Gene's eyes grew tender and he caught her to him suddenly. "Tis not you who should ask pardon of me. And, dear love, you shall have it all your own way about the apartment house, atthough I confess it is not what I have dreamed of in the way of a home. But as long as I have you, what matters home. But as long as I have you, what matters it where we stay? And see now what a state I have gotten your hair into! Your big bear of a husband will have to help you do it all up have gotten your hair into! Your big bear of a husband will have to help you do it all up again."

So for a time the threatening rock in the current of their domestic life was escaped.

A few days later they returned to Washington, and at the earliest opportunity visited the apartment house which Victoria had already determined should be their place of residence. It differed little from other places of this character except, perhaps, it was a trifle more elegant. There was a main entrance with a marble stairway grand enough to have graced a palace, which was merely for show, guests preferring to use the more convenient elevators. There were frescoes, carvings, gilding—too much of the latter—rich carpets into which the foot sank as softly as into a bed of moss in a forest glade, paintings—not all of them in the best taste—covered the walls; here and there bits of statuary, and the rooms were filled to overflowing with furniture upholstered in silken brocatelle, but in all that weary waste of elegance there was no place where the eye could stay itself and be at rest.

"It is all very grand—and very vulgar," Gene thought to himself as he and Victoria followed

"It is all very grand—and very vulgar," Gene thought to himself as he and Victoria followed the agent who was showing them about.

Victoria was delighted with everything, but Gene, whose taste craved something quieter felt something like dismay creep into his heart. When he reached what purported to be the library he stopped, leaving the two to go on without him, and sitting down in front of the gas-log fireblace he fell into a fit of musing gas-log fireplace he fell into a fit of musing.

"A gas-log fireplace," he thought contemptuously, "how can one build castles by looking at a gas-log? Long, long ago I sat by a real hearth and watched the logs drop apart and down in the deepest heart of the fire I saw a picture. It was a room with softy, timed. a picture. It was a room with softly tinted walls, and bright with books and pictures and shaded lights, and by the fire I saw a woman sitting-a woman whose slim white fingers fashioned tiny white garments, and ever as she worked she crooned a low, soft melody. And the picture faded and another arose and lo! a cradle stood on the hearth, and over this the woman bent and softly sang and rocked. And this too faded, and after a time the prattle of a child filled the quiet room, and a boy climbed up on my knees and nestled a curly head down on my shoulder and I felt the clinging of tiny arms."

Maine has thirteen months of winter, and what is left is summer. There is a legend in this state, that has, like most historic lies, been handed down from generation to generation, until it has come to be regarded as truth by the bewhiskered Eskimos of this section, that the thermometer, during a particularly hot summer once soared to the torrid heights of three degrees above zero. Amissville, Va., Feb. 8, 1907.

Dear Uncle Charlie:
Here I come again full of fun, with a sweet kiss for Uncle and a big hug for each dear cousin.
Uncle, you are the dearest old chap that ever lived, always ready to cheer us when we are in trouble, and always ready to have fun together, for I love everyone who likes to have fun. Uncle, I believe we country tacks get more fun out of one week than the city chaps get out of one year.

I guess it is time for me to express my opinion about you sleeping in the chicken coop. Goodness sakes alive! you must be hard up for such a roosting place! I honestly think it looks hideous for a gentleman of your standing, and I will be grieved until I hear of you doing better. I would love to see your dear, sweet face and have a talk with you. I bet if you are as funny talking as you are writing, I would laugh myself silly; but for all of your liveliness I know you are all right, for I am a great admirer of you and yours.

Uncle, I was going to say one word about your sweetheart. There are lots of bachelor girls over here, so do come over and get one. I bet you would make a smash on all of them for you are so good looking. I will tell you the fact. I have almost worn my Comport out looking at your picture, where you were singing a solo in church. You looked magnificent, Uncle Charlie. Have you ever been in our State? It is considered one of the most healthy in the Union. Our principal crops are wheat and corn. We also raise large oat and rye crops, have large, black apple and pear orchards, raise all kinds of berries, raspberries, gooseberries, currants, strawberries and blackberries. I do not think there is any more fun in anything than there is in going huckleberrying: to get up a crowd and go and spend the day in the woods, that's where the fun comes in.

I can cook everything, can sew, make nearly all of my clothes, but don't know mucn about fancy work; do housework, can hitch up a horse and buggy, and can also dr

Flossie, dear, I fear that I don't deserve all the bouquets you are handing me. As long as you don't hand me any lemons, though, I don't mind. Now as regards that hen coop. I know a hen coop is not a nice place for a gentleman to reside in, but poverty and necessity compal me to reside in one just now. I'll don't hand me any lemons, though, a don't hand me any lemons, though, a don't hand me any lemons, though, a don't mind. Now as regards that hen coop. I know a hen coop is not a nice place for a gentleman to reside in, but poverty and necessity compel me to reside in one just now. I'll tell you how, why and wherefore I reside in a chicken coop. You see it is like this. There is a man who has done me a low-down trick, and so I've gone into a chicken coop to lay for him. Living in a chicken coop is princely, compared to living in a city flat. I lived in a flat in Brooklyn, that was so narrow, that we had to take the wall paper off if we wanted to turn in bed. I had a dreadful time with Toby in that flat, as we had to teach him to wag his tail up and down, as there was not room for him to wag it sideways. I'm a good deal funnier talking, than writing. I wish you could see my face when it is talking, you'd never forget it; it looks like a piece of pepsin chewing gum that's done a hard week's work between two rows of strong teeth and come out of it with rows of strong teeth and come out of it with the wreck train cleaned up the mess it had made.

Yes, Flossie, I've been in Virginia, and I admire the state greatly—what I saw of it. But I was so busy looking for you, that I did not see much else.

GOODRICH, TENN. Feb. 14, 1907.

GOODRICH, TENR, FED. 14, 1807.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I will tell you about the trip I made to Nashville, Tennessee, during Christmas week.

The Sunday school at this place had a nice Christmas tree on Christmas Eve night, it was very nice, we had several nice hymns and drills.

My brother who had not been home in two years, came home on Christmas Eve, and he and I left home on the five o'clock train and went to Nashville to see our sister and brother. We arrived in Nashville at 9.30, and got on the street car and went to the City Hospital, where my sister is a train nurse; she likes the work fine.

We went to the hotel and took dinner with my brother, who is working for the Postal Telegraph Co. He is boss over fifty men. They are doing the underground work. After we had a good dinner we went out to work with him. It is a grand sight to see them drilling rocks with steam. We had a pleasant time with him and then we went to the show, it was simply grand.

We went from there to the hotel and had supper and after supper went to see my sister and went all through the hospital and met all of the sweet nurses, and doctors. It is sad to go through a hospital and see all the suffering, I stayed all night there, and in the morning we all went to see some of our relatives.

I have six brothers and two sisters. One sister is married and has not walked since July 1906, she has the rheumatism and cannot turn herself in bed, and can't hardly feed herself. Her two daughters do all the housework, one is fifteen and one twelve. I am five feet and one inch tall and have dark hair, brown eyes and dark complexion. I sent one of the cousins a post card, but never got any answer. I would be glad to receive letters or post cards from any of the cousins.

Pearl, I am glad your Sunday School had the Christmas tree on Christmas Eve night, Pearl, I am glad your Sunday School had the Christmas tree on Christmas Eve night, as it would have been terrible if they had had it on Christmas Eve morning. I am glad your sister has taken up woman's noblest profession—nursing—but I'm terribly grieved to find she is a train nurse. I know trains get smashed up, splintered and wrecked, but wood and iron have no feeling, and I don't see why your pretty sister should be wasting her time nursing trains, when so many sick boys and girls need attention. I fancy I can see your sister new putting a poultice on a locametive's sister now, putting a poultice on a locomotive's chest, rubbing a day coaches' tummie, and giving a dose of castor-oil to a Pullman car. I should like to see a Pullman car in bed, and your sister feeling its pulse, and putting blisters on its feet. I am also interested in t blisters on its feet. I am also interested in that rock-drilling business. What are they drilling rocks for? Can't Uncle Sam get enough soldiers without enlisting rocks? If ever I went into battle I'd like to get behind a regiment of rocks. A battalion of rocks on the march would be an imposing sight. Does it take the rocks long to learn their drill? Fancy telling a regiment of rocks to "Eyes front, and shoulder arms!" And they drill by steam nowadays instead of using a drill sergeant! Oh, my! oh, my! oh, my! what are we coming to? We are all glad that Pearl lives in a Good Rich town. It is seldom we find a town that is both good and rich. I'm good, but I'm not rich. Billy the Goat is rich, but not good. Maybe Pearl the Seriom we find a town that is both good and rich. I'm good, but I'm not rich. Billy the Goat is rich, but not good. Maybe Pearl will tell us how her burg manages to be both good and rich. I'd like to move into a good rich town. Toby says he'd chloroform the inhabitants and steal the town. I think I'd be habitants and steal the town. I think I'd be grabbing a lot of easy money while the job was being put through. The town I'm existing in is a pretty slick burg, only the trouble is every cent you get you have to work for, and a town like that gets on a man's nerves after awhile. Pearl, please put us wise to the best time to find your town asleep as I've serious intentions of shifting it, unless it is well tied down. down.

Here is an exciting and exceedingly interesting letter from a locomotive engine to ever run his iron horse around the C. L. O.

924 E. Creighton Ave., FORT WAYNE, INDIANA.

PEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I have been called an eagle-eye for over seven years now, and you will think so too, if you ever travel on the Pennsylvania railroad, over the Western division, and happen to get on a train I've got my iron borse hitched to; I am afraid you will think you are riding in an air-ship, and when I turn my iron horse loose at seventy to ninety miles an hour clip, I am afraid that lone hair of yours wouldn't have strength enough to stand up. But I have always been able to safely land right side up with care at my destination, and I hope you will sometimes find a little room in your heart for a locomotive engineer, when you say your prayers, that I may almays be as fortunate in the future as I have been in the past.

Bravo, Fred, I am delighted to have you join our ranks, as there is no class of the community that I admire as much as the engineering class, especially that section to which you belong. Yours is a dangerous calling, and few of you ever reach old age in one consignment. If your head lives to be old, it is a ten to one If your nead lives to be old, it is a ten to one shot, that your legs, arms or wings die young. It is all very well to sit back in a cozy parlor car, and admire the scenery in comfort, but little we think of the brave fellows who are distinct that driving that panting mass of iron and steel into the biting storm, or pushing her into the inky blackness of the chilly night: every nerve strained to the breaking point. Thousands of strained to the breaking point. Thousands of people are slaughtered on our railroads yearly, but it is seldom the fault of the engineer, as an accident usually costs him his life, as well as the lives of those on his train. President Roosevelt always makes it a point to shake hands with the engineer of the train on which he is traveling. This is an honor to the engineer, and also an honor to the President, for a good engineer is just as valuable to the com-munity, in his sphere, as is a good president He is also as a rule, very much more of a hero.

Now, Willie Jungles, that I have paid of a hero.

Now, Willie Jungles, that I have paid a tribute to you and your noble brothers of the iron road, I must tell you that I have done some pretty fast traveling myself, in my time. I remember once leaning out of the window of a Pullman car in Jersey City to kiss my best girl good by, and when I finally got, or thought I got, my lips on hers, I found I was kissing another man's wife in Washington, D. C., and that lady's husband promptly pushed a hole in my face, that you could shovel a cord of wood into without noticing it. Another time I was my face, that you could shovel a cord of wood into without noticing it. Another time I was traveling to Chicago; and I went into the lavatory to wash my hands and face, and there was another man in there who was also scaping the cinders out of his whiskers. The train was rocking like a sailing boat in a hurricane. I had got my face nicely scaped, and as the train rocked and pitched, my face slipped out of my hands into the other fellow's hands, and his face slipped into mine, and there was he washface slipped into mine, and there was he washing my face, and I washing his. Mine was a better looking face than his, and he ducked better looking face than his, and he ducked out of the door, and ran with it. It was a most unfortunate thing for me, as the man was wanted for burglary, arson, bigamy and several other accomplishments. Of course I got arrested, and went to the pen for ten years for his crimes. I could not put a brave face on the matter, as I had lost my proper face. Anyway, it was not long before my face got him arrested, and he was put in jail, too. Strange, but in later years we were both in a head-on railroad collision, and he lost his head, and I lost mine, the doctore get our heads mixed, and I got mine back. Gee whiz, but I

DDAR UNCLE CHARLIE:
I received my membership card and button, and think they are lovely. I thank you a thousand times for them, and will try and follow your League rules. I am a girl who lougs to enjoy the corner with Uncle and cousins. Now, Uncke, I will tell you what I can do:
I can iron cook sew bake and play the piano. Uncle Charlie, when your birthday comes let me know, and I will make you a nice birthday cake. I have a little pet dog named Sissy; she will sit up and beg. She looks like a little fox. I have one sister and brother. I am fifteen years old. My brother is visiting at California with relatives. He likes it real well there. I am in the seventh grade at school. I have written to two of the cousins. Well, Uncle, I'll have to close. Tell all the cousins to write to me. Hoping to see this in print, I remain, Gerrie, you are certainly a young lady of many and varied accomplishments, and your ability in certain directions, and along certain lines is so staggering, that I hold my breath when I contemplate it. First you say, you can iron cook. Well, if you can do that, you are a braver and more heroic specimen of humanity than can be found anywhere around this section. All the cooks in this vicinity are daughters of the Emerald Isle, and if you started to iron one of these, you'd be up against a first-class funeral before you'd blinked an eyelid. There is Delia Dooley, who is Czarina of the Cook Stove, and Empress of the Soup Tureen, and professional ple paster, and pudding pusher to the family next door at '$25' a month. I should to the family next door at '$25' a month. I should like to see you try to iron a few of the Hiber-nian kinks out of Delia, and I can just bet you three doughnuts to one pant's button, that bethree doughnuts to one pant's button, that before you got that iron on her hide, you'd be decorating a nice bold slab in the morgue or occupying a nice warm grave 'neath a sevendollar headstone in the local boneyard. No, Gertie, dear, you may iron cooks on the peaceful mountainsides of the pineclad Ozarks, but by the golden shores of Brighter Spheres, before you can say one times once.

You also say that you can stew bake and play the piano. How do you know that you can bake the piano. You don't mean to tell me that your folks buy a $500 piano, just for the fun of having baked piano, and fricasseed music for dinner. Baked piano at $500 a clip would be an expensive menu. Even Rockefeller could not stand for a dish of that kind more than twice a week. But honest, I don't believe you have got an oven large enough to more than twice a week. But, honest, I don't believe you have got an oven large enough to bake a piano in, and I don't see how you could bake a big full-sized piano without setting fire to the house. Toby says, maybe you saw a leg off at one time, and have baked piano legs one day, and fried piano wires the next. Billy the Goat is quite excited over the last item. He thinks that fried piano wire would be a nice succulent tuneful dish, and would make a man full of music for many a long day. I don't succulent tuneful dish, and would make a man full of music for many a long day. I don't know why you want to sew a piano, unless you want to put the piano legs in pants, and wanted to put some buttons on them. DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:
My soul thrills with rapture when I sit down to write you, for you are "one in a million" who can love so many at one time.
You might take one of the cousins (fair sex), and leave one less old maid. Just wait until Leap Year and give us all an equal chance.
Nothing would give me more pleasure than to tell you right now how much I think of you; but, shall wait until 1908, and console my troubled mind with the thought that I love and am loved by Uncle Charlie, if he hasn't been Oslerized in the mean-time.

On second thoughts I think I could dispense with the other half of the undervest as I believe it is thoughts I think I could dispense with the other half of the undervest, as I believe it is quite warm around Richmond (at least they made it warm enough for me, when I was there last), and superflaous clothing can be discarded. LA FAYETTE, UPBRUE Co., TEXAS.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

Here comes another jolly girl of sixteen, asking for permission to sit on your knee, and chat a while with you and your nieces and nephews.

I am a brunette, have brown eyes, and dark brown hair, am five feet three inches tall, weigh one hundred and fifteen pounds.

Uncle Charlie, this is my first attempt to write to your band.

I am going to school now at La Fayette, a small town of two dry good houses, one drug store, postoffice, schoolhouse, and one church, two cotton gins, one shingle mill, and about three hundred inhabitants.

I live two miles west of La Fayette and walk to school.

Uncle, do you give Billy a desert with his dinner? But nevertheless my intentions are to write again, and then I shall come with a subject and a sweet smile, and just a whole lots of kisses for you.

Uncle, I think you are the jolliest and kindest fellow I have ever seen, and your picture looks so sweet with that bald spot on your head. But never mind, Uncle, I am going to make you a wig out of some hog's hair.

As all the rest of your nieces write and tell what niec cakes they can bake I will tell you that I can bake potatoes and that is all. I have had a little experience in making syrup puddings, but I can't make a cake.

How many of you cousins like music? I do, but can't play much. I have an organ, but like the piano the best. Uncle, how do you like music?

I imagine you and Billy can make some aweet music when he has you by your long golden curls. Kiss me good by, Uncle, how do you like music?

I may our little friend and hope to be called your niece.

Now, Addie, to discuss your letter.

Now, Addie, to discuss your letter. First, let me tell you I am intensely interested in those two "dry good" houses in your burg. A house that will dry good, is a blessed business, for you have certainly got me all at sea. Toby sends a sweet kiss to Cissy, and I send a whole bushel to you. You're a dear little girl, but if you take my advice you'll quit ironing cooks, it is a dangerous business. Up here we put cooks under glass cases, and throw sugar at 'em; no irons for us.

A jolly Virginia cousin has typewritten us a cheery note, which I will now read for your three dry good or construction are used cheery note, which I will now read for your three dry good houses so they can be constructed in these dry good houses so they can be constructed. in those dry good houses, so they can be copied and erected in those states where the raintall is excessive. Please explain your methods of weather-proofing houses, and also tell me what you mean by coming with a subject and a sweet smile. I have heard of a South Sea Islander going to a reception dressed in a plug hat, and a clear conscience, but never knew of a ledy going around with a subject and a a lady going around with a subject and a smile. As regards a desert for Billy's lunch, Billy says he wouldn't eat a desert, it's too dry. He says a desert for dessert would make him desert the table and run for his life. Can't you find something more appetizing than an old sandy desert for Billy to chew?

CHAPTER XV.

LONG ARROW.

T the date of our story some of the Indian tribes still occupied lands in the heart of our present civilization. The stern destiny which year by year has thrust them farther away from the hunting grounds of their fathers was indeed taking shape. Already the forests had been felled, and the smoke of many a settlement rose through the clear air throughout the Eastern States, and even the eastern portion of New York had become too densely peopled for the aboriginal inhabitants. It seemed impossible for the two races to It seemed impossible for the two races to breathe the same air. But in the interior of the State the settlements were so few that remnants of the tribes yet lingered, reluctant to exchange the home whose varied and beautiful scenery had so recommended it for lands farther west, which were neither endeared to them by old association nor of so fair an outward aspect.

Among these remnants was a band of about

Among these remnants was a band of about fifty warriors who made their home near the beautiful lakes of which the Empire State is justly so proud. One of their villages was located about ten miles from the settlement that has thus far been the scene of our story.

A space had been cleared of trees to an extent of about two hundred yards square, and there, scattered irregularly about, stood the wigwams of the tribe. In all, the village numbered not far from two hundred and fifty inhabitants, including men, women and children.

habitants, including men, women and children.
Fortunately for the neighboring white settlement they had always been amicably disthement they had always been amicably dis-posed to the strange race who were gaining a foothold among them. Such at least was the general sentiment, although occasionally one, fiercer or gifted with greater foresight than the rest, contemplated with ill-concealed alarm and jealousy the onward sweep of European civilization.

The chief of this remnant of a tribe bore, as was usual among the Indians, a name founded upon his personal qualities. He was called Long Arrow, and the reader will of course conjecture without difficulty that the name was given in compliment to his reputa-tion as a skillful archer. This reputation, however, rather bore reference to the past than to the present, for the chief was no longer young. He had one daughter, a maiden of sixteen, who, for grace and beauty, bore off the palm among all the maidens in the village. For this reason, as well as her rank as the only daughter of the leading man in the tribe, her hand was eagerly sought by more than one of the young men who surrounded her.

But the daughter of a chieftein way of a chieftein way out satisfaction, for she well knew that her favorite Okanoga was skilled in the use of the bow, and she fondly anticipated that he would win the prize.

CHAPTER XVI.

But the daughter of a chieftain was not to be lightly or easily won. Probably Waurega herself would readily have made her own choice, but her father was not only to be consulted, but expected to have the controlling voice in the matter. And Waurega being of a yielding disposition, and having a great reverence for her father, never dreamed of disposition.

a yielding disposition, and having a great reverence for her father, never dreamed of disputing his will.

Already he had had several applications from young men for his daughter's hand, but he had invariably answered that she was too young yet to marry. But he voluntarily promised that on Waurega's seventeenth birthday he should make the selection of his future son-in-law, and recommended them to birthday he should make the selection of his future son-in-law, and recommended them to have patience until then.

To this advice the young men submitted with the better grace, perhaps, because each one, in the plenitude either of his vanity or his hope, fancied that his own chance of success was the best. But whether or not this should prove correct, the will of the chief was law and it was useless to think of thwarting. law, and it was useless to think of thwarting it.

Waurega had too much of t' spir.t of her waurega had too much of t spirit of her sex not to have some choice in the matter. Though her filial subordinat n was such that she did not venture to mention the subject to her father, she earnestly hoped that his choice her father, she earnestly hoped that his choice would rest upon a certain young man who bore the name of Okanoga. Waurega's preference certainly did her credit, for there was not in the village a more shapely and handsome youth than he. He was an adept in all manly exercises, and had approved himself in all respects an honorable and high-minded young man, and had never been charged with a base or dishoporable action.

man, and had never been charged with a base or dishonorable action.

As Waurega's seventeenth birthday approached she could not avoid specul 'ing much and anxiously upon her father's probable choice. But upon this point she was left entirely to conjecture, since, with an Indian's habitual taciturnity, he did not choose to indicate his the disherence in the state of t entirely to conjecture, since, with an Indian's habitual taciturnity, he did not choose to indicate by the slightest sign what that Jecision would be. But upon the evening preceding the eventful day he broke through his silence. He had sat for an hour at the door of his lodge smoking a pipe, with that imperturbable gravity which is characteristic of an Indian. Yet occasionally his glance would stray to his daughter, who was stirring about within the lodge, attending to some domestic duty. He took care, however, not to let his daughter see that she was an object of attention, for he cautiously withdrew his glance whenever he thought that she was likely to observe it.

At length, however, he removed the pipe, and called his daughter by name.

"V aurega!"

At the sound of her name, the maiden came instantly to her father's side, and looked anxiously in his face.

"Take your seat beside me, Waurega," said the chief: "I have something for your ear."

In a graceful attitude of childlike dependence and trust Waurega sank to the ground, and rested her hand upon the knee of the chief.

"Let my father speak," she said. "His "Thou hast ever been a; od child, Waurega," said the chief, fondly stroking the luxuriant hair of his daughter.

"The heart of Waurega leaps for joy at these words from the great chief her father," said the maiden, while her face beamed with satisfaction at this unwonted commendat in from her stately and taciturn parent.
"The sight of thy face in my lodge has been very pleasing to me, and thy step has been like that of a young fawn, Waurega, but te time has come when thou must leave thy father's lodge."

The young girl murmured inaudibly, and clung the closer to her parent's knees. She knew to what he referred and her heart beat faster. The next sentence, no doubt, would reveal the name of the husband whom her father had selected for her.

Would it be Okanoga? So she fervently honed.

"Seventeen times the corn has risen and the snows have fallen," said the chief, "since Waurega came to her father's lodge. She was a child then, small and weak, and her foot, now swift like the fawn's, had no power. But now she has grown into a maiden pleasant and fair as her mother was, and the young man have asked her father to give her to and fair as her mother was, and the pleasant and fair as her mother was, and the young men have asked her father to give her to them as a wife."

The chief paused, but Waurega only nestled the closer to his side and still kept silence. "It is right that Waurega should wed," said the chief. "The Long Arrow is growing old. The young sapling has become an old tree, and the time shall come w. the warriors will need a new chief. It is right that Waurega shall wed and raise up a successor to tread in the steps of the Long Arrow, and take his place at the council-board."

"Now," thought the Indian maiden, "will my father speak the name of my husband. Oh, that it may be Okanoga!"

But again she was mistaken.

"Waurega must be the wife of one who is brave and skillful. One whom Long Arrow shall not be ashamed to acknowledge as his son."

The old chief went on to explain the plan of selection which he had adopted. It was characteristic, and showed that he had not forgotten his ancient skill with the bow.

In brief, he proposed to have a trial at archery, open to all the young men in the tribe, his daughter's hand being the guerdon of the victor. The trial was to take place at

When the sun was an hour high Long Arrow convoked a meeting of the young men of the tribe. There was not one that did not know the meaning of this summons, for this day had been anxiously looked forward to by day had been anxiously looked forward to by more than one of them.

When all were assembled, and silence was obtained, the chief spoke.

"My children," he said, "I have called you together to choose a husband for my daughter. For seventeen summers she has grown up in the lodge of the Long Arrow, and now she is old enough to wed. Is there anyone among you that would be the husband of Waurega?"

"I! I!" shouted fifteen young men simultaneously.

The chief slowly glanced from one to another, and then his eye rested with a tance of pride upon his daughter, who stood half screened from view behind him. Despite his grave appearance, he could not help feeling proud of such a tribute to the power of his daughter's attractions proud of such a tribute to the power of his daughter's attractions.

"It is well," he said after a brief pause.

"There are many that would lead Waurega to their wigwam, but she can marry but one."

Again there was a pause, and the hearts of the young men beat now high with hope, now fast with suspense.

fast with suspense.
"I cannot give her to all," continued the chief. "I would give her to the best."

Again he paused, but after a brief silence continued, his figure swelling with conscious pride.

"You know, my children, that I am called the Long Arrow. When my form was as straight and my eye as sharp as yours, there was not a young man in the tribe who could speed his arrow farther or straighter to the mark than mine. Mary a time have I loosed the shaft and brought down the bird that was wrift, when the wine. swift upon the wing. Many a time has my arrow drank the heart's blood of the enemy. He that would win the daughter of Long Arrow must shoot the best arrow. I have gold " said

Of course it was understood that there was to be a trial of skill, and that the hand of Waurega was to be the guerdon of the victor.

Two hours were allowed for the preliminary preparations. The young contestants were anxious to see that their bows were in projer trim. They at once dispersed to their respective wigways and began to tighten the respective wigwams, and began to tighten the strings, and select their best arrows, so that the trial might be made under the most advantageous circumstances.

Some of them had but a faint hope of success. They had been pitted against each other so many times that the particular degree of skill possessed by each was a matter degree of skill possessed by each was a matter of general knowledge.

Yet none wholly despaired. Accidents may happen in the best-regulated families, and even the most skillful are liable to failure. There were two, however, who had hitherto be a considered for the palm of archery, and who stood much the best chance of victory.

The first of these was Okanoga, the favored lover of Waurega. He heard the chief's proposal with satisfaction, for he had well-grounded confidence in his own skill. Besides he had everything to stimulate him to unwonted effort. He had glanced at the face of Waurega, and he interpreted aright the shy glance of encouragement. She wished for his success, and he determined to leave nothing undone to secure it.

The other and only formidable rival of undone to secure it.

The other and only formidable rival of Ok oga was the Indian introduced in the early part of this tale as Indian John, sometimes called Jack, who is destined to play quite an important part in our story. It will be remembered that he served as the guide of the lawyer when wandering bewildered in the woods. His position in the tribe was by no means so desirable as that of Okanoga. He had sunk into disgrace through his habits of intoxication, which had been steadily increasing upon him. His father, with stern sorrow, lamented the degradation of his son, and had often remonstrated with him, but to sorrow, lamented the degradation of his son, and had often remonstrated with him, but to no purpose. John had listened sullenly, and when his father ceased speaking would stray away by himself, and whenever by any means he obtained a sum of money, it invariably found its way into the till of Hill's Tavern.

Besides the passion for drink there was one other to which John had yielded. In common other to which John had yielded. In common with the young men of the tribe he loved the chief's daughter. Till now he had loved her hopelessly, for his conduct and degradation were such that it would have been the wildest presumption for him to dream of an alliance with the pure-minded Waurega.

But now an opportunity was presented of with the pure-minded Waurega.

But now an opportunity was presented of which he might take advantage. The competition was open to all, and by the terms no one was excluded. She was without reserve to become the wife of him who shot the best arrow. John well knew his own skill and was proud of it. The time had been when in virtue of it he held a position equal to that of his chief rival, Okanoga. For among the Indians skill and prowess universally command respect and regard. But this was before he had yielded to the haleful spirit which had he had yielded to the baleful spirit which had brought him down from his high estate. There were times when John became sensible of his fall, and formed the determination to abjure the tempting fiend which had caused it. But again asserted its claims, and again appetite he yielded.

But when the chief made the announcement which had created so great an excitement among the young men, a spark of the old fire kindled in the breast of John, and his step became prouder as he thought how great tribe, his daughter's hand being the guerdon of the victor. The trial was to take place at ten in the morning, and immediately upon the result being known the simple rites of the Indian marriage were to take place, and Waurega would at once assume the duties of a wife.

The beautiful Waurega, uaughter of the great chief, would then become his wife. He would lead her to his wigwam and henceforth become the envy of the tribe. Yes, he would try. He would do his best, and perhaps, nay, it was very possible that he would succeed.

The same thought had come to another. The father of John, though he had felt deeply the humiliation of his son, had not lost all confidence in him. When he came staggering home, his naturally good features wearing the besotted look of a drunkard, in all his indignation and sorrow he could not help recalling the time when John stood forth among the young men prominent for his skill and strength, and a feeling of pride in the past mingled with his mortification for the present. He, too, had not failed to recognize the importance of his son's seizing this moment to retrieve his well-nigh lost position and establish his reputation on its old foundation.

He waited for his son in the wigwam that they jointly occupied.

"Has my son heard the announcement of the chief?" he asked, fixing his eyes upon John.

"He has," was the brief reply.

John.
"He has," was the brief reply.
"And does not his heart warm to the daughter of Long Arrow, the beautiful Waurega, whose step is light upon the turf, and whose smile is like the sunshine?"
"Waurega is very fair. Happy will be he who shall win her to enter his w.gwam," replied the son

N any ordinary country district each hive should bring a clear profit of two dollars a year, and their care consumes so little time, that they do not interfere with other work at all.

The vicious temper of the old-time black bee had much to do with people's neglect of this profitable industry. The Italian bee is, however, so much better as a honey-gatherer, that they are almost universally kept now, and are so gentle in disposition that even a nervous person can easily learn to manipulate them without fear of stings.

Another advantage in keeping bees is their

Another advantage in keeping bees is their real value in fertilizing blossoms. Many blossoms have to depend entirely on insects to carry their pollen, and no insect does this work so well as the busy bee. A good supply of bees in a district means a good crop of fruit fruit.

Most of the modern hives are made on the Langstroth model, with movable frames, so that one make is as good as another.

A hive, with a full colony of bees and the queen, will cost nine dollars. An extra hive for the swarm, four dollars and thirty-five cents. If, however, you have already established on the old-fashioned plan, you need only get a couple of hives and a tested queen, which will cost about a dollar and a half.

The beginner's natural desire to increase

The beginner's natural desire to increase his apiary often leads him to think that every his apiary often leads him to think that every swarm is an advantage, which is a great mistake. The progressive bee-keeper tries, in every possible way, to discourage swarming, so as to keep the colonies strong; it being an established fact that three meager colonies will not gather half as much honey as one full complement.

One swarm early in the season from each full complement.

One swarm early in the season from each hive will double your stock, and will not materially interfere with the storing of honey. If you purchase a hive, colony and queen, early in the spring, a swarm is likely to issue about May. Usually the excited condition of the bees will indicate when this is about to take place. If they were bought from a practical bee-keeper, you will have little trouble, because the queen will have had one wing cut, which prevents her flying; so when the swarm issues from the hive, she will be found on the ground near the hive, with a group of bees around her, and the principal be found on the ground near the hive, with a group of bees around her, and the principal swarm not very far away.

Approach very quietly, and place a small ware trap over the queen. The traps are sold by all the bee supply firms, and cost, I think, twenty-five cents. Place the trap in the opening of the hive you desire the swarm to occupy, cautiously approach the full swarm and with a soft broom swap the bees into and, with a soft broom, sweep the bees into the hive, if the position they occupy makes it possible. possible. If not, use a box or pan, and carry them to the hive, and empty them in front. They will soon commence to occupy the new home. The slide of the queen trap can be opened, and the bees inside will settle down

Should the queen not have been clipped, the swarm may all go up into a tall tree, or even travel some distance and be lost, unless someone is watching. For this reason it is well to have the hives located where they are easily seen from the house, and make a rule to have a close inspection once or twice a easily seen from the house, and make a rule to have a close inspection once or twice a day, during the spring.

You may wonder that I have said nothing about stings during this hiving process. The truth is that, before leaving the old home, all the bees that are going out with the queen load themselves with so much honey, to insure food for themselves and the royal mother, as well as propolis—a sort of gummy varnish, which they use to stop cracks, and cover rough surfaces—that they are rarely able to sting. If, however, you are nervous, you can subject the main bunch to a few whiffs of smoke. A queen never uses her lance except on a rival queen.

This condition, of course, does not obtain at other times; so before such work as replacing sections or foundations, the smoker, a bellows-like arrangement, must be lighted. When burning freely, blow a few whiffs into the entrance, and about the corners of the hive. This stupefies the bees, and renders manipulation of them and an invasion of them and an invasion of hive. This stupefies the bees, and renders manipulation of them, and an invasion of their domain, comparatively safe. However, it is always wise to wear a veil made of mos-quito netting to fit on the hat and hang well down. Gloves can also be worn. The Italian bee is the best to keep—a gentle little creature, once familiar with, the gloves will soon

After the abdicating queen and her followers have left the old hive, there remain some few thousands of imperfectly developed fewers have been appeared to the same of the sam new thousands of imperiectly developed fe-males of mature age, called workers, a few hundred males called drones, a few thousand young workers, and many thousands of eggs, each reposing in its own particular cell. The most perfect system of government prevails in the hive, each individual insect having allotted duties, which are apparently intuitively understood, accepted, and conscientiously performed, in unerring routine, from the hour

When the baby breaks from its cell, it walks out into the busy world of the hive, and, after a few hours, dips into an unsealed cell of honey, and sips its first meal; not, however, to be selfishly consumed by its own walks out into the busy world of the hive, and, after a few hours, dips into an unsealed cell of honey, and sips its first meal; not, however, to be selfishly consumed by its own body, for the larger portion of this honey is secreted, and, after a little while, is conserved into a predigested, milky food, the quality of which this wonderful little nurse has the power of regulating, as it wanders from cell to cell, feeding the one to sevendays-old larva. Occupants of royal cells receive the most carefully digested food; next in quality come the workers; last the drones.

At the end of six days, the cells are capped over, by workers, with a paper-like surface, and the well-fed, worm-like occupants left for eleven or twelve days, during which time they develop shape and strength to gnaw their way out. After the six or seven days of nursing, come six or seven days of building combs, and cleaning the hives; and then, being strong enough, the worker begins the arduous work of foraging.

The first young queen to issue from her cell, after the old queen's abdication, becomes the reigning sovereign, maintaining her right by might, tearing down all queens' cells, and killing any princesses who are making their entrance into existence. For about a week she marches around, monarch of all she surveys, exempt from all toil or duty. Then she issue to the property of the pr veys, exempt from all toil or duty. Then she issues from the hive, takes a few circles about, then returns. Probably on the same, or day following, she will take what is called the "nuptial flight", meet some drone in midair, and return some hours later, to become sole mother of the hive, and be so treasured by the colony that they feed her on royal jelly all her life, and tend her with the most zealous care. During every twenty-four hours of a good season, when pollen is plentiful, a queen lays from two thousand five hundred, to four thousand eggs.

Within a week or two after a virgin queen

Within a week or two after a virgin queen has taken her nuptial flight, the hive should be opened and the frames removed, one by one, and examined until the queen is found. She can be distinguished from the others by the length of body, and the way the other bees cluster around her. Pick her up very gently by the back, being careful not to squeeze her abdomen, and, with a pair of sharp sc' sors, clip both wings on each side of her body. This insures a short flight at swarming-time.

The drones, as the name implies, do not even earn their own living, being ruthlessly killed at the first approach of scarcity.

Bee culture is an interesting occupation, and well worth attempting.

Correspondence

I. E. O.—Being so far from a depot, I think your best course would be to keep hens for egg production. Pack and ship to a city market, as prices within your vicinity are hardly worth catering to. As you can raise most of your own feed, sow wheat and oats, and raise clover hay and very little corn, which will give you a well-balanced ration for the climate you live in.

S. D.—I think, as you take Comport regularly, you have only to look in some of the back numbers to find instruction for rearing young turkeys. I am sorry that it is quite impossible to answer by mail.

J. F. J.—At the request of several of our correspondents, I have been trying to find people who have Buff Orpington ducks, or eggs, for sale, and though I have corresponded with several people keeping them, all have imported stock, and have not yet bred sufficient to care to sell, as this is an entirely new breed, and only lately introduced into the country.

F. B.—Give your birds more animal meat, plenty of clover hay, and wheat. Stop corn in the quantities you have been feeding it.

W. F. is anxious to have instructions for incubation, and asks why chickens die in . e shells after pipping.

A.—The eggs have either been laid by debilitated stock, or there have not been enough males with the hens, or the trouble may arise through fault in running the incubator. Refer to the last two months, which have given instructions for incubating and brooding.

for incubating and brooding.

V. J. G.—Do you think there is money in the poultry business, if one has a liking for it?

(2 How do you pull feathers from geese and duck. (3) Where, and at what time of the year, do you sell them?

A.—Yes, there is money in the poultry business for those who are energetic, and are interested in the work. (2) It is hardly worth while plucking ducks and geese while alive, at the present time, as feathers do not bring what they did; but all feathers should be kept when killing young stock for market, the plucking being done whilst the animal heat is still in the body. (3) May and June are good months for selling young ducks. Thanksgiving and Christmas are two great markets for both ducks and geese.

A. K.—I have turkeys with windbladder. One

A. K.—I have turkeys with windbladder. One has it on the chest, the other on the wing. What can I do for them?

A.—Air puff, or emphysema, arises from an injury to the lungs, caused by a fall, or sometimes feeding. As the injury to the lung heals, the air puff will disappear. You can relieve the bird, and hasten recovery, by pricking the blister with a needle, to allow the air to escape.

A. H.—Your birds are too fat. If possible, give them free range, and feed only at night, quite a light meal of hulled oats, or wheat.

P. N. E.—When is the best time to market.

N. F .- When is the best time to market

A.—Young ducks sell well in May and June. Full grown are better kept for Christmas.

L. M.—Which is the best make of roofing paper, with which to cover chicken-houses? And how many hens will a house twelve by twenty-five keep well for the winter?

A.—We have used both makes of roofing paper, and found them equally satisfactory. If the whole space is given to the fowls, without any passageway, about forty birds.

any passageway, about forty birds.

F. B.—Is a house seventeen by eleven large enough for twenty-two hens? (2) I got two hundred and ten eggs in February. Will a sixty incubator be the right size, or would you get a larger one? (3) Where is the best place to put it? It could go in a bedroom upstairs, or in the cellar, which is large, dry and well lighted. (4) Would it be better to have an incubator and brooder combined, or separate? Which is better, indoors or out? (5) Do you think Minorcas are as profitable as Plymouth Rocks?

A.—Yes, if your birds have a large yard or free range, and the house is kept very clean. (2) I think an incubator which holds about one hundred and twenty would be the most serviceable. (3) A well-ventilated cellar would be the better place to stand it in. (4) Decidedly, get two separate machines. I like outdoor brooders, for then you can use them in a room early in the season, and stand them outside as the hatch get settled. (5) No, I do not, especially when young chickens for market are desired.

W. H. F. desires to know which is the best

W. H. F. desires to know which is the best breed of hens for eggs, and young chickens for killing, and if a sixty-egg incubator would be advisable for family use. Has three young roosters, three months old. Would they caponize and brood chicks this season? How can they be made to stay in the nest and take the chicks?

My Drars:

Was there ever a paper published that takes so much pains, and trouble with-its different departments? I know of many that, pray, for and bless Comport for bringing them help, light, and sunshine, in so many ways. Now then put on your specs, and read the following:

"My dear J. A. D. Come out here in the woolly wild West and 'rough it.' Its shain't cost you a cent. We have a horse a lady, can ride. I want you to see a 'Round up' of cattle.' My wife and I live in a shack all alone 'Mit.our, sellufs.' We have an organ, two good cows, hens, sheep, plenty of beef, so don't lack for grub, come on."

God bless that generous soul, and all this is because I have written them cheering letters, and buoyed them up a bit, and mark this, it has all come about through our own, dear Comport. This magazine is doing untold good, bringing happiness, pleasure, assistance, health and wealth to many of its readers.

Mrs. Alice Geiger, Libby, Moat, writes me: "I live on a homestead, alone most of the time. You cannot know what a blessing Comport and all the cheerful letters are to me, so far from civilization. This is a mountainous, well-timbered district and well-watered. Perhaps if we walk along cautiously we can see some deer, it is interesting to watch them unseen, then make a slight noise and see them go bounding gracefully away, other animals are seen occasionally, but they are harmless. Y DARLING: Will you not permit me to see you before you leave the parsonage? Know ing the peculiar circumstance that brought you back, I cannot take advantage of them and ing the peculiar circumstances that brought you back, I cannot take advantage of them and thrust myself into your presence without your consent. I have left home today, because I felt assured that, much as you might desire to see 'Le Bocage,' you would never come here while there was a possibility of meeting me. You, who know something of my wayward, sinful, impatient temperature, and told that your health is wrecked, that you are in the next room and yet, and it is not see you—my own Edna! Do you wonder that I almost grow desperate at the thought that only a wall—a door—separates me from you, whom I love better than my life? Oh, my darling! Allow me on more interview! Do not make my punishment heavier than I can bear. It is hard—it is bitter enough to know that you cannot, or will not trust me; at least let me see your dear face again. Grant me one hour—it may be the last we shall ever spend together in this world.

"Your own, St. Elmo."

"Ah, my God! pity me! Why—oh! why is it that I am tantalized with glimpses of a great joy never to be mine in this life! Why, in struggling to do my duty, am I brought continually to the very gate of the only Eden I am ever to find in this world, and yet can never surprise the watching Angel of Wrath, and have to stand shivering outside, and see my Eden only by the fashing of the sword that bars my entrance?"

Looking at the handwriting so different from any other which she had ever examined, her thoughts were irresistibly carried back to that morning when, at the shop, she saw this hand-writing for the first time on the blank leaf of the Dante; and she recalled the shuddering aversion with which her grandfather had glanced at it, and advised her to commit it to the flames of the forge.

and advised her to committee forge.

How many such notes as this had been penned to Annie and Gertrude, and to that wretched woman shut up in an Italian convent, and to others of whose names she was ignorant?

Mrs. Murray opened the door looked in, and said:

to Annie and Gertrude, and to that wretched woman shut up in an Italian convent, and to others of whose names she was ignorant?

Mrs. Murray opened the door looked in, and said:

Come, I want to show you something really beautiful."

Edna put the note in her pocket, took the beoutiful."

Edna put the note in her pocket, took the bouquet, and followed her friend downstairs, through the rotunda, to the door of Mr. Murray's sitting-room.

"My son locked this door and carried the key with him; but after some search. I have found another that will open it. Come in, Edna. Now look at that large painting hanging over the sarcophagus. It is a copy of Titian's 'Christ Crowned with Thorns,' the original of which is in a Milan church, I believe. While St. Elmo was last abroad, he was in Genoa one afternoon when a boat was capsized. Being a fine swimmer, he sprang into the water where several persons were struggling, and saved the lives of two little children of an English gentleman, who had his hands quite full in rescuing his wife. Two of the party were drowned, but the father was so grateful to my son that he has written him several letters, and last year he sent him this picture, which, though of course much smaller than the original, is considered a very fine copy. I begged to have it hung in the parlor, but fearing, I suppose, that its history might possibly be discovered (you know how he despises anything like a parade of good deeds), St. Elmo insisted on bringing it here to this Egyptian Museum, where, unfortunately, people cannot see it."

For some time they stood admiring it, and then Edna's eyes wandered away to the Taj Mahal, to the cabinets and book-cases. Her lip began to quiver as every article of furniture babled of the By-Gone—of the happy evenings spent here—of that hour when the idea of authorship first seized her mind and determined her future.

Mrs. Murray wasked up to the arch, ower which the curtains fell touching the floor, and laying her hand on the folds of silk, said hesitatingly:

"I am going to

Of hopes too fondly nursed, too rudely crossed,
Of many a cause to wish, yet fear to die;
For what, except the instinctive fear
Lest she survive, detains me here,
When all the 'Life of Life' is fied?"

The lonely woman looked upward, appealingly, and there upon the wall she met—not as formerly, the gleaming, augurous, inexorable eyes of the Cimbrian Prophetess—but the pitying God's gaze of Titian's Jesus.

When Mrs. Murray returned to the room, Edna sat as still as one of the mummics in the sarcophagus, with her head thrown back, and the long, black eyelashes sweeping her colorless chooks the long, black eyerasico and proceeds.

One hand was pressed over her heart, the other held a note directed to St. Elmo Murray; and the cold, fixed features were so like those of an Angel of Death sometimes sculptured on cenotaphs, that Mrs. Murray uttered a cry of alarm.

As she bent over her, Edna opened her arms ans said in a feeble, spent tone:

"Take me back to the parsonage. I ought not to have come here; I might have known I was not strong enough."

"You have had one of those attacks. Why did you not call me? I will bring you some wine."

"No: only let me co away as soon as possible."

"No; only let me go away as soon as possible.
Oh! I am ashamed of my weakness."
She rose, and her pale lips writhed as her sad eyes wandered in a farewell glance around the room.
She put the unscaled note in Mrs. Murray's hand, and turned toward the door.
"Edna! My daughter! you have not refused St. Elmo's request?"
"My mother! Pity me I could not grant it."

"Does he not recall his ancient fame? Will he not strive with the young men, that perchance he may win the prize of victory? Then will the young men cease to deride him because he has given himself up to the power of the strong fire water of the English, that has so often mocked him, and made him appear like a silly woman. Will he not turn away from it, and take the place that is his?" "My father has spoken well," said John gravely. "I have been foolish, but now I will be wise. My arrow shall fly to the mark with those of the young men."

be wise. My arrow shall my to the those of the young men."
"It is good," said the delighted parent, who had feared that his love for drink had so far blunted the ambition of his son that he would find it difficult to lead him to his wish. "It is mad. My son shall conquer. When the sun Waynega to his good. My son shall conquer. When the sun sets he shall lead the fair Waurega to his wigwam."

Cheered by this confident anticipation of his success, John sought out his bow and arrows, and examined them closely to make sure that they were in a proper state to use in so important a trial.

CHAPTER XVII.

INDIAN JOHN'S DOWNFALL.

Unfortunately for Indian John's chances of success, a strong temptation presented itself to him while he was engaged in preparing for the trial of skill now so near at hand.

This temptation assumed a form the most difficult for one of his nature to resist.

The day previous he had succeeded in obtaining a little money for a service rendered to one of the whites, and had as a matter of course gone to the tavern to invest in liquor. Usually he was unprovided with more than would buy what he could drink at once, but on this occasion he was better supplied. He accordingly purchased a bottleful, which he brought home with him. This bottle he had laid away, so that it might not meet the eye of his father. But as he was preparing for the trial, as luck would have it, the thought of this bottle, the contents of which were not more than half exhausted, came to him, and with it the pangs of thirst assailed him. with it the pangs of thirst assailed him. Should he stop a moment and quench his thirst?

Under ordinary circumstances he would have done so, but the thought that he needed a clear head and a steady hand restrained him for a moment. He knew that at his best Okanoga would be a formfdable rival, who would not allow him to win the victory without a struggle. Should he be so imprudent out a struggle. Should he be so imprudent as to endanger his aim by drinking, his rival's chances would be very greatly increased.

This was enough to make him pause. The thought of the magnitude of the stake for which he was playing, the attractive prize, and the restoration to respectability migut well lead him to struggle with his craving appetite.

well lead him to struggle with his craying appetite.

At any rate he was resolved to try it, and accordingly laid down his bow and arrows, and made his way to the hiding-place where he had laid the bottle.

It proved to be more than half-full. John's eyes sparkled as he held it up to the light, and from that moment he resigned himself without a struggle to the power of his enslaver. Then, overcome by the strength of his potations, he sank down in a stupor with the bottle by his side.

from that moment he resigned himself without a struggle to the power of his englaged and the structure of the power of his englaged to the power of his englaged in testing their between standard the buildings. Around there was a belt of land, a part of which was devoted to the limited agricultural purposes for which the Indian was known. On one side, the trial in archery was to take place.

Of course so important an event made agreet stir in the little settlement. In an Indian village, even more than 'in a small low England town, something of private interest becomes from their living so much in common. Of course, therefore, such an occurrence as a trial which should decide to whom the chief's daughter should be given was no ordinary one. Half an hour before the time form the spot where it was understood that it would take place. All the village was collected except the young braves who were to contend for the prize. They were builty engaged in testing their bows, and fitting them arrived, the people was no ordinary one. Half an hour before the time and the spot where it was understood that it would take place. All the village was collected except the young braves who were to gaged in testing their bows, and fitting them that the place has been been decided as the chief, whose dignity, as well as his own interest in the result, made it only proper that he should remain away. Last, but not least, Waurega herself, the fair subject of momentous time. An hour would decide no momentous time. An hour would decide a well-grounded hope that Okanoga would prove successful, but this was not certain. His bown might break, his arrow might be too light or importance of the contest might act unfavorable was a propeleusions on this score. There was not one of the contest might act unfavorable was a propeleusions on this score. There was not one of the contest might act unfavorable was a propeleusions on this sco

But the minutes were flying, and the limited time allowed to the contestants for preparation had nearly passed. As Waurega sat with down-cast eyes, her mind given up to anxious speculations upon the uncertainties of her position, suddenly her father presented himself.

He was dressed in the style which he was wont to adopt on occasions of importance, and was resolved that no effort should be spared on his part to impart dignity and impressiveness to the approaching spectacle.

"Is my daughter ready to go forth and see the young men strive which shall lead her to

"Is my daughter ready to go forth and see the young men strive which shall lead her to his wigwam?"

"Need Waurega go?" asked the maiden with an appealing glance. She felt that she would prefer to remain by herself until the issue was decided, and thus be spared the anxiety of watching the varying success of the different claimants for her hand. But this was evidently no part of her father's intention. He considered that it would not be in consonance with the proprieties of the occasion, and it is a mistake to think that the Indians, and others whom we are wont to consider more unconventional than ourselves, are really less wedded to the conventions which prevail among them than ourselves.

To Waurega's appeal, therefore, the chief answered by intimating, in a manner which could not be mistaken, that it was not only his desire, but his will that she should be present on the occasion.

Trained up to habits of implicit obedience, Waurega never thought of questioning this decision of her father's, but at once proceeded to array herself for the occasion. And here, as was not unnatural under the circumstances, a little of that admiration for finery, and a desire to appear as well as possible in the eyes of her rustic admirers, led Waurega to array would be a general center of obse. ation to all who were present, and she reflected with not a little complacency how much envy she would excite in the bosoms of some maidens in the tribe who felt themselves fortunate if they could secure but a single lover.

Waurega's dress would not perhaps have excited much complacency in a belle of the present day. She had at some time become the possessor of a piece of bright red calico, obtained from the English setlement near by, which she had fashioned into a garment to suit her own taste. Around her neck she wore two separate strings of beads of different colors. Of these she was not a little proud, viewing them in the same light as a fashionable lady would her diamonds. Other parts of her attire must be left to the imagination of the reader. It is enough to say that when she presented herself to her father, and professed herself ready to go forth, he viewed her with a critical look which s bsided into a glance of approbation. Moreove, the thought which she had expended upon her dress had superseded for a time the more anxious thought which the occasion was calculated to inspire.

P. W.—We think that, if your brother's sentence was to pay a fine or serve a stated time in prison, and if he has served his time in prison, the prosecution would now have no claim against him for the payment of the fine. We think that a claim upon a mortgage would ordinarily be preferred to a note claim, unless the mortgage was set aside, or procured by fraud. We think it would be wise for you to have your brother execute a chattle mortgage upon his property to you, to secure to you the money you have advanced him in the purchase of the same. You should have the mortgage recorded. The fact, that a person contracted a debt in one County and subsequently took up his residence in another, would not relieve him in any way, from the debt.

L. E. S.—It will be necessary for you to first locate the

L. E. every port and country in the world.

Mrs. W. F. F.—We are of the opinion that, if the man whose road you wish to close, car prove that he and the persons or person from whom he purchased the property have had undisputed and absolute possession of the same for the person of the years, under the laws of the State from which you write, your right, of action for its recovery is barred by limitations, but that, if you can prove that he has not fully established his title by adverse possession, you can reclaim the land. We can only give you the law on the case, but cannot tell you what would be the verdict of a Court or jury on the facts of your case, as that depends upon what defence the other side puts in as well as the view the Court takes of the testimony of the various witnesses on both sides.

Mrs. E. N.—We are of the opinion that under the laws the various witnesses on both sides.

Mrs. E. N.—We are of the opinion that, under the laws of the State you mention, if a man dies leaving no will, and if he leaves a wife but no children, or issue of deceased children, his estate both real and personal, after the payment of his debts, would go one half to his widow and the other half to his father and mother or brothers or sisters, unless it amounts in all to less than fifteen hundred dollars, in which event the Court has power to make further provisions for the widow. (2) The property you mention is all personal property. (3) We think the mortgage, you say your husband has given, is a lien upon the land it covers, and your husband's estate would only realize the equity or difference between the value or selling price of the land and the amount it is mortgaged for.

W. F. B.—We think you should renew your action against the receiver of the Company. If you can substantiate upon the trial the facts you state to us, we think you should get judgment. Whether your judgment would be of any value or not would depend upon whether the Company has assets enough to liquidate its indebtedness.

A. G.—We know of no way for you to enforce the payment of your claim against your brother, without its being made public. We think, if your brother refuses to pay you momey he owes you, that you should not hesitate to sue him, and compel him to pay it. We have no sympathy for a man who withholds from his sister her property, unless he has some good reason for doing so.

property, unless he has some good reason for doing so.

C. L.—We are of the opinion, that B. would, upon the death of her husband, have dower in the real estate owned by her husband at the time of the marriage or, acquired thereafter, but not in the land he disposed of before marriage. We do not think it absolutely necessary that the deed be recorded, but we do think it would be much better to have it recorded, in order to shut off any question as to the fact as to whether the transfer was bona fide, or simply held by the children, as his trustees, with the intention of barring his widow from her dower.

M. M. S.—We are of the opinion that, if you yountarily

M. M. S.—We are of the opinion that, if you voluntarily turned your property over to your husband, there is no way for you to recover it. (2) We think your son is entitled to pay for his services for the time not barred by the Statute of limitations, unless he has in some way waived his claim.

Mrs. R. W.—We are of the opinion that the note you mention is collectible, provided, of course, the man, whom you say signed the note, has property sufficient to pay the same, and provided the Statute of limitations has not been against it.

mos been against it.

Mrs. M. E. M.—We are of the opinion that the deeds you mention would be valid as against the grantor, if not recorded; to be walid against any subsequent holder of a deed to the same property; the first deed should be recorded within forty-five days after its execution, and the second deed at once. You can either take the deeds to the County Clerk, or other recording officer, of the County in the State where the property is situated, and have the same recorded upon paying the recording fee, or send them by mail (registered mail would be better), or express, together with the recording fee, and have them recorded. You should enclose a postpaid envelope addressed to yourself, and ask them to return the deed, after recording, to you. If you do not know the amount of recording fees, send the deed with a request for the amount, and send that afterward. The fees vary in amount in different places, but rarely exceed $2 or $3, unless the deed is a very long one. amount in different places, but r less the deed is a very long one.

less the deed is a very long one.

J. L. M.—Under the laws of the State you mention, we are of the opinion, that ten years' peaceable possession of real estate, cultivating, using and enjoying the same, and paying taxes thereon, would give to the possessor full title to one hundred and sixty acrea, and all beyond which he had in actual possession. Whether you can establish title to the land you mention in this manner, depends entirely upon your proof and questions of fact. Possibly the taxes against it have been assessed with the other property you own, and you may have paid the taxes. If the taxes have not been paid, the only way for you to get title for the payment of the taxes would be through a tax sale of the land. If your statements to us are in all respects correct, we think, that your record title to the property is defective, and that your only chance to hold the property is by proving title by adverse possession in the manner above stated. Upon your statements to us, we think the title to the land is in the heirs at law or devisees of the man who first divided it.

Mrs. C. M. E.—If your husband's mental condition is

Mrs. C. M. E.—If your husband's mental condition is such that the Courts would refuse to appoint a committee or trustee to take care of his property, and if the property you mention belongs to him alone, we do not think there is any legal way for you to compel him to repair the property unless he consents to it.

pair the property unless he consents to it.

Mrs. G. F. M.—The fact that under the laws of the State you mention, in case the couple you mention had been married prior to April 20, 1877, the property of the husband would pass differently upon his death, than in cases where the marriage had been performed since that time, does not extend to births of either party prior to that time. You state that the couple you mention were married in 1900. Therefore, upon the death of the husband eaving no will, his property would pass as stated in our former communication to you, which applied to cases where the marriage was entered into since April 20, 1877, and the fact that one of them was born before that time has no bearing on the dease.

C. R.—We are of the opinion that the word "issue" used in the manner you describe, means "child or children of your own body". (2) We do not think you can be part of your own body". L. L.—Under the laws of the State you mention, and upon the statements made by you to us, we are of the opinion that (1) if, at the time of your father's death he leaves no widow and no other children except the three you mention, and in case he leaves no will, his estate both real and personal would be divided in equal shares among your children, that is, of course, after his debts are paid; if he marries again and leaves a widow, she would be entitled to one third, and the balance would be divided among the children in equal shares, so any child that might be born to him by another marriage would share equally with you three. None of you have any ittle to any of his property until his death, when the real estate descends by operation of law, and the personal property should be administered by an administrator appointed by the Court. You, as the oldest son, would probably be appointed, if you made application. (2) If at the time of your father's death he leaves a will, of course his property would be distributed in any legal manner he directed in his will, and the executor, named therein, would have the distribution of it. It would be possible for him to cut any of his children out of a share in his estate by will, if he should so desire. So you see, it is to your own and your anser's interests not to get his displeasure any more than you can possibly help, as he might cut you all out of any share in his estate by his will. (3) We think the Statute of limitations runs against debts or unwritten contracts, in your State, within five years, (4) Your father can sell his farm without the consent of you children. (5) Bank deposits, notes and mortgages are personal property. (6) Taking rail-road ties in the manner you state would be criminally punished for getting drunk and sleeping in his own barn while in that condition.

while in that condition.

Nebraska Lassie.—Upon the death of your husband, you will be entitled to dower in his real estate, and he cannot convey good title to it without your signature on the deed to release your incifeate right of dower. You have no other interest in his property during his lifetime, except that you can compel him to support you. Your children by a former marriage have no interest in his property, nor will they have in his estate, unless he provides for them by will, or legally adopts them. You have no recourse for his crossness unless it amounts to cruelty. We do not doubt that he, himself, regrets being so much older than you.

M. S.— Under the laws of the State you mention we older than you.

M. S.— Under the laws of the State you mention, we think, upon the death of a man leaving no children, his real estate would descend to his widow, if he leaves one, but, in case he should leave no child or children, or any widow, then his parents or the survivor of them would get the property. In case there is a widow she is preferred to the parent, just as children are preferred to the widow, except that the widow has dower in any event.

Mrs. M. R. M.—Upon your statements to us, we are of the opinion, that, if the title to the property you mention was in the first wife of your husband, he does not own the property but simply has an estate by curtesy in the land (the use of it for his life), and the property belongs, subject to his interest, to the children of his first wife. You and your children have no interest in the property, nor will you have upon his death, as his interest in it dies with him.

Mrs. P. H. T.— Under the laws of the State—with him.

Mrs. P. H. T.—Under the laws of the State you mention, we are of the opinion that, if A. left no parent, his estate would have descended in equal shares to his brothers and sisters of the whole blood, and that the brothers and sisters of the half blood are excluded. (2) The sister of the whole blood who took possession, had no preference over the other brothers and sisters of the above blood, and they should enforce their right against her estate. (3) The limitation by statute, we think, runs in fifteen years, but it is very hard to establish.

The Great Chicago Mystery

The Man With Many Aliases

By Rosser W. Cobbe Author of "The Mark of the Beast"

Copyright, 1907, by W. H. Gannett, Publisher, Inc.

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

Orit Truman and his assistant, Ralph Dayton are called from New York to Chicago, by the Chief of Police, to assist in suppressing crime. The leader is variously described, and one asserts he has a harelip. The well-trained minds recall the recapture of "The Man with Many Aliases," Jim Hollis, Jim Holmes, Chris Dougherty, and the blow which splits him from the nostril to his mouth, and which, when healed, might pass for a harelip. "How is our work?" asks Crit. There are several cases in our line. There's a missing girl and a jewelry robbery on Fifth Ave., but they can be left for a few days. Truman tells Ralph to wire the Police, get Peter, and we'll outline a general plan.

Percy Mandeville calls to see Sylvia Lyster; she tells him the call must be final. She calls a servant to show him out. Sylvia, befriending Kathie Mandeville, confides to her that her husband makes a proposal of marriage to her. Sylvia still loves her husband. Custer Quex is engaged to Sylvia. While Crit and Ralph are on the way to Chicago, the former has a telegram. "Percy Mandeville disappeared. Think he went to Chicago. Took Sylvia Lyster with him," signed by the President of the bank. The Chief of Police tells Crit of a hold-up in a saloon, a month previous. As they emerge from City Hall they are joined by Peter, who is waiting. He tells Truman, Jim Hollis swears if he gets free he'll never let you take him alive. The chief tells Truman of a crook, Christie Ferris, who has three or four names, although only twenty, who is in for "dipping." Truman "sweats" him and asks him, "Do you want to know who it was got you in here this last time?"

It's Jim Hollis. Christie will get even with him. Crit wants Christie to locate Jim Hollis. Ralph and Peter enter a saloon. Ralph recognizes Percy Mandeville. His companions are known as "Fake" Pete and "Snowfiake" Mike. Ralph and Peter strike a clue.

Custer Quex refuses to credit the rumor concerning Sylvia Lyster's disappearance with Percy Mandeville. Kathle Mandeville

Custer Quex refuses to credit the rumor concerning Sylvia Lyster's disappearance with Percy Mandeville. Kathie Mandeville admits Sylvia receives a registered letter.

Ralph and Peter listen to the conversation, Mandeville sinks down lower in his chair dead to the world—his two companions grow impatient. The detectives notice they do not drink. Christie Ferris comes hurriedly into the room, giving a gesture Ralph has seen before. Crit Truman, in the guise of "Hang-eye" John, enters, and fakes his escape from Joliet.

Crit Truman talks with the warden of Joliet penetentiary, and finding that "Hang-eye" John is serving sentence exacts a promise to keep outsiders from communicating with the warden for a few days. He conceals the disguise of "Hang-eye" John. Christie Ferris leads Truman into a trap. He leaps out of danger, and entering a saloon sees Christie Ferris, who drinks water. A crook who will keep from drinking brandy after putting a man, where he did me, is under Jim Hollis, Truman reasons. Ferris produces the hat Truman leaves. The barkeeper, utters a terrible oath. Truman follows Ferris and hears him tell "Four-time" Jim that he "dropped" Crit Truman. He hears the low cry and earnest pleading of a girl. Crit Truman offers assistance and tells her to go to the number on the card. The girl hurries away and Crit slips back into the hall. He hears Jim Hollis order Ferris to tell "Fake" Pete and "Snowflake" Mike to bring Mandeville there. Crit Truman hurries into the street. Ralph Dayton sees Crit Truman brone away in Triumph by "Fake" Pete and "Snowflake" Mike, the last two supporting Mandeville.

A man's life is at stake. Crit thinks if he were really that infamous criminal he would not walk so openly. The men are jubilant. "What will 'Four-time' Jim say?" If Crit fools him all is plain sailing. Ralph goes to Mrs. Haddam. "Fake" goes with Crit. They make a few changes and Crit follows "Fake" up and down countless numbers of stairs and opens door atter door furnished with dead olocks until "Fake", opening one

Mr. Lyster, and the next train bear anim and control to Chicago.

Sylvia Lyster goes to walk. She feels a grasp on the shoulder and is tossed in a waiting automobile; she is blindfolded and carried bodily into an unfamiliar place. Crit Truman is gagged and bound hand and foot, and left to die. Suddenly he watches the gradual clearing of the OW he was shivering, but he paid no attention to this. There might be a siender chance for escape, provided he could see, and his strength not be sapped from him.

Able to see everything in the room, Crit's keen eyes darted about, and finally rested upon a huge nail about six feet from the floor. It was sometimes used to support an exerciser, but was now empty. Like a snake, Crit wiggled his trussed body across the room to this nail, there were lines of suffering upon the handsome face; and the brown hair lay wet over the broad, noble brow of the detective, but the firm mouth was tight set, and there was determination written in the whole figure.

Raising his hands above his head, with infinite torture, and the exertion of almost superhuman strength, Crit managed to draw the rope fastening his wrists over this nail.

It was terribly slow work, and the pain was human strength, Crit managed to draw the rope fastening his wrists over this nail.

It was terribly slow work, and the pain was almost more than he could bear, enured as he was to suffering, but finally one strand parted, then another, and after over an hour, Crit fell exhausted to the floor, but with his hands free. Resting an instant, he untied the hateful gag, and then his ankles, and stood, unbound, a terrible figure of the avenging spirit. Let "The Man with Many Aliases" beware, for his ancient enemy is free, and ready to gather this king among crooks into his net.

Crit rejoiced that these crooks had not gone through his pockets, for in them were materials for a makeup, as well as his little kit of tools. Wornout though he was, Crit waited long enough to adjust an excellent disguise, then tried the door.

As he had expected, it was locked, but he made short work of opening it, and found himself in the hall below the one where he had waited for Sylvia Lyster.

"Strange they put so little protection in front, but then I suppose everyone is a crook here, and they think they have nothing to fear," the detective mused, striking the nail on the head as usual.

As he descended into the street, looking like as usual.

As he descended into the street, looking like an old, wornout drunkard, stumbling away to get a drink as best he could, Crit felt his spirits rise, and he muttered to himself:

"I think your race is nearly run, my friend, and that I will come in ahead on the home stretch," then he started, for he heard a familiar voice say:

"Hello old sport!" and turning he looked Peter straight in the eyes.

Not knowing who might be about, Crit said with a whine:

"Won't you stand for just one?" and Peter understanding, cried in a hearty voice:

"Sure, come on in here, and I'll set 'em up," and led the way into one of the many saloons which line Twenty-second street.

Throwing himself into a chair, Peter ordered drinks, and Crit, in keeping with his assumed character, slouched opposite.

Had anyone been watching, the detectives took good care to see that there were none to overhear, the following conversation might have proved interesting.

As the two pretended to make way with the fiery liquid furnished them, Crit asked in French, a language he and his boys sometimes used:

"Could you makeup, as Ferris, Peter, without any time for study?"

Without a moment's hesitation, Peter leaned forward, and blinking his eyes rapidly as Ferris did all the time, he said, imitating the young crook's exact tone and manner:

"Can I? Can I? Aw what's dat? Just try me can I? Oh my!"

"Bully Peter," Crit said, "you'll do. Know where to find him?"

"Yeter nodded. "They are all in a saloon about three doors from here."

"No, but talking. I couldn't catch anything they said, and so I kept watching for them and you."

"See if you can get Ferris out, and then come in here." Crit ordered, and Peter vanished.

"Not drinking."

"No, but talking. I couldn't catch anything they said, and so I kept watching for them and you."

"See if you can get Ferris out, and then come in here," Crit ordered, and Peter vanished, to return a couple of moments later with Ferris. Peter afterwards told how easy it had been. He had dashed in and said excitedly:

"Skiddoo. One of dem Truman fly mugs is on to de doins at de gang rooms. Fake put me next." He used this name because he saw that "Fake" Pete was not one of the party.

The crowd vanished, but as he melted away, Jim Hollis hissed in Ferris's ear:

"Meet me in half an hour, you know where."
Ferris upset by the various experiences of the day and not having had his usual allowance of opium, was shaking like a leaf, and so it was not hard for Peter to get him to go with him.

Crit merely grunted when he saw Ferris, who gladly sat down, but refused to drink.

"I dasn't." he kept saying over and over again, but finally he yielded, and as t'ere was enough opium to soothe his nerves in the drink, the detectives had no difficulty in dealing with him.

They took him boldly, for being used to opium he was not made unconscious by it, with them over on State street, registered at one of the third-rate hotels, and took him to a room. Then it was that Peter did some wonderful work. Looking at the face of the crook, he made up his face so that even Crit could not see the difference. In the meanwhile the latter had taken off the clothes of the young crook, and with a wery face, Peter assumed them. Ferris lay, delightfully stupefied, watching them, a smile of contentment on his face. His tortured nerves were steeped in their longed-for dr g.

Crit bent over him, and said distinctly:

"Jim Hollis will kill you if you do not meet him."

"Jim Hollis will kill you if you do not meet him."

The crook only smiled. He cared for nothing now.

"Where were you to meet him?" Crit asked. The young criminal gave an address not half a dozen doors around the corner on Twenty-second street across the street from the gang rooms, as the quarters were called according to what Peter had overheard, while lingering about. Peter waited for nothing more, but hastened away, for he was late already.

Crit looked at the young figure, old in vice and wickedness, lying on the bed, then shook his head, almost sadly.

Thinking of the horror of vice and crime in the young, Crit took off a portion of his clothing, assumed such of Peter's garmenus as he could wear, then raising the window, deliberately threw them into a dark air shaft, where they were some time later to puzzle the police. Having changed the makeup of his face, he left the room, turning the key in the lock, and pocketing it. He knew that the young crook could easily be released after he recovered from his opium debauch.

No notice was taken of him as he left the hotel, and went to the place where he had agreed to make headquarters, and there he found Ralph. The two talked earnestly and Ralph explained that a terrible load was to be lifted from Miss Lyster's heart, for a telegram in reply to his had given the information that although Mr. Lyster had adopted a girl who without doubt was the daughter of Jim Hollis, she had died not a year thereafter, and that Sylvia Lyster was his own child.

"I will be glad to hand the girl over to her father," Crit said with real pleasure.

"And he in turn will have to deliver to another what he regains," Ralph said with a laugh, "Oh, a love affair?" Crit asked pleasantly.

"Rather. The broken-hearted lover comes along. Poor child she has been cruelly used," and Ralph sighed as he remembered the distress of the girl, and her horror of the man she hau been told was her father.

"Very well, we will accomplish more han other what he regains," Crit asked pleasantly.

"Yes," he sai

Ralph knew he was talking with Peter.
"What? You say he abducted her? When?
This evening?"
Ralph was listening now very intently.
"Year is everything all right?"

Ralph was listening now very intently.
"I say, is everything all right?"
"It is, is it? Good. All right, we'll have him tonight do not fear, good by. Take care of yourself," and with that Crit hung up the receiver, and turning to Ralph told him of the abduction of Miss Lyster, adding:
"They are in hiding in the Ghetto, on the West Side. Patsy is accepted as Ferris. Now Ralph for our last move. Our man must be caught tonight."

Post Card Album

That Will Hold Fifty Cards.

Our fifty-card Album is the most attractive on the market. On each page two cards may be displayed; the leaves are very heavy rigid paper stock of a heavy green shade, providing a very tasty and attractive background for all cards, and when two pages are opened together showing four cards, the appearance is extremely attractive, and one cannot neatly preserve a collection of Post Cards unless they are displayed in an Album. And better still, a very nice collection of Souvenir Postal Cards represents the individual and personal thought of absent or distant relatives and friends and they are very entertaining for visitors who enjoy looking them over; so, that in an Album, arranged in order, they are readily accessible and may be examined time after time with no harm to the Cards, and thus preserved in remembrance of the senders. No one thinks of collecting Souvenir Cards without an Album. Everyone wants an Album and the demand, just now, exceeds the supply. We are fortunate in having a great quantity on hand of first-class Albums which we are to distribute as premiums to those who will send us clubs of subscribers to this magazine as per our offer below.

Club Offer For a club of only 2 yearly subscach, we will send an Album free and will include a set of four Post Cards free, as a beginning towards filling the Alddress COMFORT, Augusta, Maine. Our fifty-card Album is the most attractive on the mar-ket. On each page two cards may be displayed; the

So many inquiries are received by COMFORT concerning that a column will be devoted to answering them. The remedies and advice here given are intended only for simple cases; serious cases should be referred to physicians, not to us. COMFORT readers are advised to read carefully the advertisements in this paper, as they will often find in them what they seek through their questions in this column. They will thus save time, labor and postage. Address The Family Doctor, Comfort, Augusta, Maine.

A. E. C., Jeffersonville, Ill.—Salol is a preparation of salicylic acid and soda, used in neuralgic and rheumatic troubles. (2) We suppose it will, if the manufacturer says so. It is no more than any one of dozens of depilatories. (3) We believe the firm is all right, as we have heard nothing to the contrary.

N. E. V., Red Oak, Ga.—The veins are caused by poor circulation, the result no doubt of the indigestion and will disappear as your diges-tion improves.

Reader, Silver Maples, Pa.—Take a bath as hot as you can stand it every night, and rub yourself thoroughly with a rough towel, till dry and red. This will improve the circulation. Eat only simple food, no fats, grease or sweets, and no coffee. Every morning when you get up go to the window and take a dozen or twenty long breaths through the nose, blowing the air out through the mouth. Get your lungs thoroughly filled with fresh air and the oxygen will go to the blood. Practice deep-breathing at any hour of the day, and as often as you think of it. You can't get too much good air into your lungs. Keep the bowels open with salts taken as needed before breakfast in hot water.

Constant Reader, Peoria, Ill.—We think the young woman runs very little risk in marrying. So little, indeed, that if she loves anyone enough to marry him she should take it. She might have a child afflicted as she was, but no longer is, but the chance is small.

M., Elm Creek, Neb.—The feet perspire because nature has put pores there for the purpose, and the soles of the feet become white as they would if kept damp in any other moisture. To stop the perspiration is dangerous. If it is disagreeable bathe the feet daily in a weak solution of permanganate of potash—one scruple to eight ounces of water. A powder to absorb excessive perspiration is made as follows: Seven ounces carbonate of magnesia; two ounces powdered calcined alum; seven ounces orris root; half dram powdered cloves. Sprinkle it over the feet.

A. B., Whitleyville, Tenn.—Your trouble is indigestion and you can overcome it only by eating such food as you can digest easily. Help it along by taking a dose of salts when needed. Take it in hot water before breakfast. If you will take a quarter teaspoonful of cooking soda in half a glass of hot water before each meal you will find it helps. And after meals if you feel an uncomfortable fullness. Drink no coffee, and very weak tea. Milk, only when you have broken bread into it. You may arink large quantities of water, but not at meals. Eat brown bread, and have it toasted through until hard. Lean meat is digestible, especially mutton, or lamb. But don't eat much. You can colly find out what digests easily by trying. Potatoes are not good, as a rule. Raw cabbage is. So is rice. However, try for yourself, and whatever you can digest easily, eat it, no matter what the doctors may say.

L. B., Wichita, Kans.—As safe as any depilatory is one composed as follows: Three parts hydro-sulphuret of sodium (crystallized); ten parts finely powdered quicklime and eleven parts starch. Apply for two to four minutes on part where hair grows and scrape off with a dull knife. Keep dry, and use only enough with water to make a paste for one application. A razor is quite as effective and safer. Depilatories are not permanent in their effects.

I. O. C., Colfax, Wis.—See answer above to

I. O. C., Colfax, Wis.—See answer above to "L. B." The cost is small and any druggist can compound it for you. There are many formulas for depilatories and if your druggist cannot give you this, he may give you another just as good. Ask him.

D. C., Sigel, Ill.—Your question was answered April Comfort.

Subscriber, Bellmont, N. D.—You are asking more than man can do. Does not the Bible ask if the Ethiopian can change his skin? He can't, nor can the Caucasian. The only way to whiten the skin is to get plenty of good air in the lungs and good food into the stomach. Do this and your skin will be as white as nature intended it to be.

L. Z., Elizabeth, N. J.—We are afraid we can do nothing more than your local physicians. Not as much, for they can see you and tell you what to do. You are so close to New York that you might try one of the great free hospitals there with some degree of relief.

with some degree of relief.

S. W. K., Ivyton, Ky.—It depends upon the conditions. Only a physician who can make a personal examination can answer you? question.

Stout, Troy, N. Y.—Stop in at any druggist's and ask him. He can show you in a minute better than we can tell you in a column. When you have got your compress you can sew strings on it and tie it around. A compress is simply a binding that presses.

B. S. M., New Hone, Ill.—Maybe you have

B. S. M., New Hope, Ill.—Maybe you have peworm. Most people are only too glad if tapeworm. Most people are only too glad if they have a good appetite and a good digestion. You can take the edge off of your appetite by eating a handful of very sweet candy just before meals. Eat it when you sit down to the table. Soft candy is the best. If that doesn't dull it, eat two handfuls.

soft candy is the best. If that doesn't dull it, eat two handfuls.

F. P., Muskogee, I. T.—You will find that our answers always include the questions when practicable. Whenever they are not so, it is because the question is one that could not well be printed. Questions of that sort must necessarily happen frequently in this column. As to your trouble of articulation, it is due to a nervousness dependent upon other physical conditions, similar to stammering. Yours, however, is not at all in aggravated form, but still two months of practice at singing and proper breathing are not enough to more than indicate an improvement. It may require a year.

F. K., Mahanoy City, Pa.—A young man of twenty-one, in fair health has no more business to be worried every time he thinks he has something the matter with him than he has to try to run Pittsburghers on cold water. If you want to be cured of your constipation get a book on Physical Culture, there are several of them, and your stomach full of good food. There is not much likelihood of your nasal catarrh going into consumption, unless you worry yourself into it. If it gets to troubling you take it out to the high

M. A. C., Clear Spring, Md.—Catarrh is more or less common all over the country and there is the least of it in the hot, dry air of Arizona and New Mexico. and the cold, dry air of Colorado. S. W., Paris, Tenn.—There are several systems for making or improving the memory, all of which cost money. You can improve your memory without any cost by practice. All you have to do is to memorize certain things, prose, verse, figures, anything you choose, and repeat it at intervals, adding to it every day. In this way you will acquire what is called memory, if you have that kind of a mind—retentive. If you have not, you will not be able to do much with it. with it.

Under this heading all questions by COMFORT readers on subjects not related to the special departments elsewhere in the paper will be answered, as far as may be. COMFORT readers are advised to read carefully the advertisements in this paper, as they will often find in them what they seek through their questions in this column. They will thus save time, labor and postage. Letters reaching this office after the 25th of the month cannot be answered in the issue of the following month.

P. E. B., Ivanhoe, W. Va.—A little hydrochloric acid in a saucer of warm water may remove the iron stain if you put it in for a minute, only, and then wash thoroughly, first in plain water, then in water with some soda in it to remove all the acid. Lemon juice will answer in some instances. Wash it out thoroughly with water in which there is soda. Oxalate of potash sprinkled on in powder and rubbed into the goods when damp, then washed out with pure water, is another recipe. These are strong acids and you risk destroying the fabric. Ask your druggist about it, if you have one in Ivanhoe.

E. M. B., Cheyenne, Okla.—The only thing for him to do is to come back and give himself up to the authorities. That will be the best evidence that he wants to live right and do right. He will have to go back to prison, but the chances are that he will not have much difficulty in getting a pardon when his record is known. He can never get a pardon as long as he is a fugitive from justice. Advise him to go straight to the prison and surrender himself without being rearrested and taken there. Have him write first to the prison authorities, sending the letter to you, showing no marks where he is. He will find it harder to get back into prison than he did to get out. A letter, however, to the authorities will be proof that he wishes to come back and do the fair thing. Encourage him to do this. It is the only way.

'Virtue itself offends when coupled with forbid-ding manners."—Bishop Middleton.

In order to meet the demand for information made by COMFORT readers on the kindred subjects of Etiquette and Personal Appearance, this column will be devoted to them, and all questions will be answered, but no inquirer shall ask more than two questions each month. We would suggest to readers to cut this column out and paste it in a scrap book. Address letters to Etiquette Editor, COMFORT, Augusta Maine.

M. and S., Echo, Fla.—It is quite correct to pin a buttonhole bouquet on a gentleman when he requests a lady to do so. Tying a man's tie is different, and it should not be done except for a kinsman or someone unable to do it himself. Surely an American girl can talk with a Dutchman if he speaks English or she speaks Dutch.

M. A. P., Mazon, Ill.—Don't ask him why he does not answer your letter. If you are very anxious, you might write and ask him if he had received a letter from you. Do it by postal. If he doesn't answer, pay no more attention to the matter. (2) Accept the man's escort home if you want him to go with you. And you may ask a man to see you home if you have no escort and are afraid to go alone. The better way is to ask your hostess to send someone home with you. A careful hostess will do that without the asking.

Spheriher. Chanute. Kans—Indulge in po-asking.

Subscriber, Chanute, Kans.—Indulge in no such familiarities unless you are engaged to the man. (2) Can't the man open the door for himself when he is leaving? (3) Introduce the man to the lady. Say: "Miss A. let me present (or introduce.) Mr. B." An informal way is to say: "Miss A. do you know Mr. B.?" Still another way is to say: "Miss A. this is Mr. B." You may take your choice.

H. W., Monticello, Ark.—Engaged persons, by long established custom, are permitted to kiss each other. If the girl you are engaged to won't kiss you she is different from most girls, and you should ask her what her reasons are. She may be so ignorant, or sensitive, that she is silly.

Doubtful, Snohomish, Wash.—The man is undoubtedly your brother-in-law though married to another woman after your sister's death. If he is not, how can his child be your niece, or nephew? (2) In engraving a ring for a married woman, use as initials those of her maiden name and her married name. If she were Mary Smith and married Jones, use "M. S. J." (3) It is not the custom for the bride to give the groom a present, though she may if she wish. Wedding presents are given before the wedding day.

Wedding presents are given before the wedding day.

True Sub., Chanute, Kans.—The girl may ask her Sunday caller to stay to supper if her parents have said she might. Or father or mother may ask him, as they please. The girl leads the way to the dining-room, just as she should lead the way into her own house. She may do as she pleases about going to the gate to meet him, but if it is pleasant outdoors and she sees him coming, it rather pleases him to have her run down to the gate to meet him, even if they are not sweethearts. (2) People walking don't "catch hold" of each other's arms any more, unless it is necessary. (3) Don't thank the man for paying for your dinner, but when you separate tell him you enjoyed the dinner and it was nice of him to ask you.

Anxious Young Man, Walla Walla, Wash.—The girl is probably diffident and doesn't like to mention the little souvenirs you have been sending to her. Ask her directly if she received them. If she says she did, ask her why she didn't let you know. You can do this in a friendly way and set her right as to the custom in such cases. But don't send her any more until you have got this lot straigntened out.

Brown Eyes, Hubbard City, Texas.—Usually when a caller starts to go, he is ready to go.

Brown Eyes, Hubbard City, Texas.—Usually when a caller starts to go, he is ready to go. Sometimes, though, callers do that just to see whether they are wanted longer. If you want him to stay longer, ask him to. (2) Lead the way into your own parlor. It is all right for the home folks to let the girl have the sitting-room when her beau comes to see her.

Florida Girl, St. Patersburg, Fla.—Engraved invitations are quite spensive. Printed ones, if well done, will answer the purpose quite as well, and cost very much less. Nothing is needed on the cards but "At Home," the date and hours, and your name, or your mother's or both, if both are hostesses.

Black-eyed Betty, Thurston, Neb.—We have

Black-eyed Betty, Thurston, Neb.—We have asked our Oracle, not being versed ourselves in such matters, what "S. W. A. K." stands for, and we are reliably informed that its meaning is "Sealed With a Kiss," and the answer to it is "Skidoo."

Anxious Inquirer, Birmingham, Ala.—In view of the numerous quarrels you and the young lady indulged in, and further, that she threw you down for another fellow deliberately, we should advise you to give her up and find someone more favorable. Do you want a house to fall on you?

Sad Sweetheart, Pullman, Ill.—You are young enough to wait and let these puzzling problems of mind and heart solve themselves. They will do it. In the mean time, if you are out of school, return again and study for a year or two. You won't learn too much.

won't learn too much.

Bashful Girl, Douglass, Okla.—You cannot remedy bulging eyes, though some eye specialist might. The flabby eyelids may be improved by a careful massaging. If you have means you should consult a specialist. You will probably make a bad matter worse by attempting anything yourself. (2) Blushing without apparent cause, is due to nervousness, or too much thought on yourself. Forget yourself and think of what is being talked about. Meet and talk with people as often as possible.

South Carolina Boy, Liberty, S. C.—When you start to church with the lady let her know you are going only to the door with her. When you get there, say good day, or good evening, and bowing politely, go your way and let her go hers.

(2) It is necessary to excuse yourself if you are going out of church, but you shouldn't let it be necessary to go out. It is bad enough to young to marry. Still if you are bound to have it so, she shouldn't wear white if she wears a hat. If she is to be married at the preacher's house quietly, she should dress plainly, in her going away gown for example. If there is to be a reception, then white is better. For going away gown any dark colored stuff she can afford, but not anything light gray, or "bridey" color. She shouldn't advertise to the traveling public that she is a bride. Old clothes are really better to travel in than new ones, more comfortable and less conspicuous. We hope this will reach you in time, for we hate to think of that seventeen-year-old bride starting out on her first journey looking like brides we have seen and some circus posters.

Ignorance, Bassett, Va.—You need no certifiate to get a marriage license, the woman being f age. Ask the clerk who issues the license.

of age. Ask the clerk who issues the license. Black Eyes, Calhan, Col.—Don't take walks later than nine o'clock, and not always then. It is not very serious to extend your walk home at night around the block. Occasions of that sort are different from walking around at night just to be walking. There is really no harm in it, but it does not look well, and is apt to make rolk.

Ignorance, West Union, O.—Posing as an artist's model is an honorable occupation. It may be made good or bad by the model herself. Artists do not object to complexion or size, if the skin is smooth and the size along artistic lines. One of New York's best known models a few years ago was over six feet tall.

Brown Eyes, Gettysburg, Pa.—The marks you ask about are caused by placing the mouth to the skin and drawing the blood to the surface. They are blue like a bruise, and remain for several days. Try it on your arm and see for yourself. yourself.

Blackberries, Martinsville, Ind.—Better wait till you are twenty-one before marrying. You will then not only nave your parents' consent, bu. be of more suitable age. (2) You might give your sweetheart just one good by kiss if he is going very far away, but no more than one.

Pansy, Independence, Mo.—When you are in Rome do as the Romans do is what we are told is proper etiquette. Still, if you are not naturally rough and coarse, as you say those about you are, it is not right to be like them. Go away and live among more refined people. Either do that or organize a Young Woman's Culture Society and teach better modes of conduct.

Blue Bell, West Durham, N. C.—As people do not naturally introduce themselves to other people, there is no rule, and the manner must depend upon the circumstances making it necesary. See answer above to "Subscriber, Chanute, Kans.," about other introductions.

Sunshine, Pattison, Mo.—Either may take the other's arm. Arm-taking, however, except when there is necessity for it, is not the vogue as it once was. Unless two people want to get very close to each other they don't take arms. It is well to do so in crowded thoroughfares, or when one party needs the assistance of the other, but ordinarily they walk apart. You may do as you please.

She drew the pastor's shrunken hand to her lips, and shook her head.

"Do not ask me to do that which my strength will not permit. There are many reasons why I ought not to come here again; and, moreover, my work calls me hence, to a distant field. My physical strength seems to be ebbing fast, and my vines are not all purple with mellow fruit. Some clusters, thank God! are fragrant, ripe, and ready for the wine-press, when the Angel of the Vintage comes to gather them in; but my work is only half done. Not until my fingers clasp white flowers under a pall, shall it be said of me, 'Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep.' The German idea of death is to me peculiarly comforting and touching, 'Heimgang'—yoing home. Ah, sir! humanity ought to be homesick; and in thinking of that mansion beyond the star-paved pathway of the sky, whither Jesus has gone to prepare our places, we children of earth should, like the Swiss, never lose our homesickness. Our bodies are of the dust—dusty, and bend dustward; but our souls floated down from the sardonyx walls of the Everlasting City, and brought with them a yearning homesickness, which should help them to struggle back. Sometimes I am tempted to believe that the joys of this world are the true lotos, devouring which, mankind glory in exile, and forget the Heimgang. Oh! indeed, 'here we have no continuing city, but seek one to come.' Heimgang! Thank God! going home forever!"

Edna sat silent for some time, with her slender hands folded on her lap, and the pastor heard her softly repeating, as if to her own soul, those lines on "Life":

"A cry between the silenes,
A shadow-birth of clouds at strife

"A cry between the silences,
A shadow-birth of clouds at strife
With sunshine on the hills of life;
Between the cradle and the shroud,
A meteor's flight from cloud to cloud!"

A meteor's flight from cloud to cloud:"

Several hours later, when Mr. Leigh returned to the study, he found Edna singing some of the minister's favorite Scotch ballads; while Gertrude rested on the lounge, half propped on her elbow, and leaning forward to dangle the cord and tassel of her robe de chambre within reach of an energetic little blue-eyed kitten, which, with its paws in the air, rolled on the carpet, catching at the silken toy. The governess left the plano, and resumed her mending of the contents of the clothes-basket.

In answer to some inquiries of Mr. Hammond, Mr. Leigh gave a brief account of his travels in Southern Europe; but his manner was constrained, his thoughts evidently preoccupied. Once his eyes wandered to the round, rosy, dimpling face of his beautiful childwife, and he frowned, bit his lip, and sighed; while his gaze, earnest and mournfully anxious, returned and dwelt upon the weary but serene countenance of the orphan.

dwelt upon the weary but serene countenance of the orphan.

In the conversation, which had turned accidentally upon philology and the Mss. of the Vatican, Gertrude took no part; now and then glancing up at the speakers, she continued her romp with the kitten. At length, tired of her frolicsome pet, she rose with a half-suppressed yawn, and sauntered up to her husband's chair. Softly and lovingly her pretty little pink palms were passed over her husband's darkened brow, and her fingers drew his hair now on one side, now on the other, while she peeped over his shoulder to watch the effect of the arrangement.

The letter was from Sir Roger; and while he expressed great grief at hearing, through Mr. Manning's notes, that her health was seri-ously impaired, he renewed the offer of his hand, and asked permission to come and plead hand, and asked permission to come and plead his suit in person.

As Edna hurriedly glanced over the pages, and put them in her pocket, Gertrude said gayly, "Shame on you, Gordon! Do you mean to saly, or, rather to insignuate, that all who read Edna's book are victimized?"

He looked at her from under thickening eye-brows, and replied with undisguised impatience:

Three U. S. Government Books for Farmers
For the first time in our history the U. S. Government is advertising Books, so the Farmer can secure very valuable information on Horses, Sheep and Cattle at a very small cost. As will be seen by the advertisement on page 7, the Government desires to have its people living in rural districts reap all the advantages and gain all the knowledge about Stock Raising that is in its power to furnish them. "Uncle Sam" wants the Farmer to make more money, and has gotten up these books to teach you many things, and offers to let you have them at the bare cost of printing and binding. They are certainly great books for the money, and the Editor advises all of "Comfort's" readers to either buy one or all of them or, at least, to send for their complete list of Government books on special subjects. This is probably the only time this advertisement will be inserted here, so you better write at once. Three U. S. Government Books for Farmers

Conducted by Cousin Marion

In order that each cousin may be answered in this column, no cousin must ask more than three questions in one Month.

OW, dears, May has really come, and the frosts of old Winter are all thawed out and we should be thawed out ourselves and feel genial and bright, and warm and sunny towards all the world. Maybe you think the world does not warm to you, and you don't owe it anything, but turn your sunny side to it and see what a difference it makes. However, I can't take up too much time in talking to you when you want to talk to me. so here you when you want to talk to me, so here we come to our work.

we come to our work.

The first cousin in the list this month is Cousin Clara of Pattison, Miss., who wants to know why it isn't just as wrong for an engaged girl to kiss or be kissed, as it is for one who is not, for, she says, there is many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip. Cousin Clara may be right in theory, but practice overthrows that, and engaged couples are simply bound to kiss and be kissed. While I shall continue to protest against promiscuous kissing, I will not say a word against the girl who kisses her sweetheart honestly believing that she will be his wife. So there. And if Cousin Clara doesn't want to be kissed before she is married she doesn't have to.

Subscriber, New Albany, Miss.: Don't accept him till he tells you he loves you, and if he him till he tells you he loves you, and if he loves you he can't help telling you so.

Violet, Springfield, Mo.: Let him call you endearing names" in his letters, but don't you all him any in yours. They never look well black and white.

Sunflower, Lancaster, Ky.: It was quite right to accept a ring from the young man, and he ought to come to see you at least once a week, even if he does live fifteen miles away. If he is the right kind of a man don't "bounce" him though your father tells you to. You are of age and may do as you please. But be sure the young man is all right.

Blue Old Girl, Pitt, Ala.: Put no confidence in dreams. It just happened that you dreamed about the man who loved you and married another. You are thinking about him too much. Get somebody else to think about, as he did.

Jack, Freehold, N. J.: "Aquarelle" means water-color—on a post card or anywhere else. Isn't there a dictionary in Freehold? (2) Write him and tell him when the weather is so bad as to keep him away, he can come some other evening. He should have written to you. (3) You may wear any colors if they are not too pronounced.

Mary, Charlestown, W. Va.: You did quite right and should feel no regret.

Brown Eyes, Benson, Ill.: Why shouldn't you obey your mother? Especially when the man she objects to has treated you as a gentleman never treats a lady. You mind your mother and teach the young man some manners by snubbing him. snubbing him.

R. A. R., Parkersburg, N. C.: Better wait till you are twenty-one before you marry. (2) If the young man does not answer your letter, forget him, as he has forgotten you. If a man loves you he is not going to be nice one time and neglect you another. When they do that, they don't care.

Long Valley Belle, Roseberry, Idaho: See answer above to Cousin Clara about kissing. (2) Wait till you are twenty-one to marry. School is for you now.

Greenhorn and Heartbroken, Troutmans, N. C.: White slippers are very nice for summer wear for young ladies, if they are kept clean. (2) Mind your mothers. When you are twenty-one you may assert yourselves, but not before. (3) My advice is not to exchange photographs, but you may do as you please.

Darling Edith, Dayville, Ore.: Most girls like to have their "pick" out of the boys they know, and it is right, if they pick the proper one. (2) Ask your mother how long you should stay out at night.

Lonely Kitty, Ladd, Ill.: You write a good letter, Kitty, and if you talk as well, I shouldn't think you would be troubled about lack of beaus. Or maybe you talk too well? If I were you, I wouldn't bother a minute about "Jim" or any other fellow, or girl, and if they cut me out, I'd go chaffing along. A bright, independent girl is sure to be popular, and the less "favorites" she has the better time she will have. Smile awhile on Dick, Tom and Harry and watch the effect on your beloved "Jim."

Blue Eyes, Sparta, Mich.: You are quite too young to be listening to love talk, and should ask the young man to wait till you are through school. By all means stop the kissing.

I. D. S., Dunlap, Ia.: If you are unhappy at home because of bad treatment and can work elsewhere, then do so. As for the young man, in two years you will be of age and can do as you please. Marry him then, and have a home of your own.

Daisy, Creste Daisy, Creston, Wash.: No kissing. (2) The young man has no right to ask you how many sweethearts you have had. It is none of his business, and that you are his now should be enough for him. (3) You may go to the young man's home on the invitation of his mother or Black Eyes, Topeka, Kans.: If she doesn't love anyone else and thinks she loves the man, and he is worthy, she might not miss it by marrying him. Still, a woman ought to know whether she loves a man or not, though many women have married in doubt and never repented.

Olive, Jacksonville, Ill.: The only meaning I know why a man should address a letter in upper left-hand corner is that he didn't know where the address should be written. And the same about postage stamps.

Somebody's Sweetheart, Mt. Vernon, Mo.: A young man can court as many girls as will let him, but he can't really love more than one. That kind of a man can't really love one, I think. (2) Wear any colors; but reds, if not too pronounced, would probably set off your brown eyes and hair better. (3) No, she shouldn't have that many unless she is out of school.

Blue-eyed Lily, North Platte, Neb.: The best way to cure a man whose manners are so bad as that is not to let him come to see you at an. The gentlemen of my acquaintance do not act as he coes. There should not be different gentlemen in North Platte. Or, if there are, you should not know them.

Marion, Minneapolis, Minn.: The young man is of the neglectful type, who make the worst husbands in the world to live with. He may have excellent habits and be a good provider, but a man to be a husband to live with must be more than that. Don't marry him unless you want to live a loveless life.

Sad Heart, Leesville, Ind.: I don't think the young man loves you at all, and cares for you only to flirt with when it suits him. Doesn't he treat you that way? He certainly doesn't act very much as if he loved you. If I were you, I wouldn't let myself be too fond of him, and would look around for someone who really meant what he said.

There, dears, your questions are answered, and I am glad that most of them are answered as you want them to be. I don't like to cast sundows in the springtime. Now, by, by, till sundows in the springtime.

(From the Chicago Tribune.) ADVICE TO RHEUMATICS

Noted Physician Tells How to Prevent and Cure Rheumatism, Kidney and Bladder Troubles.

Rheumatism, Kidney and Bladder Troubles.

(By Geo. Edmund Flood, M. D.)

If you would avoid Rheumatism and Kidney and Bladder Troubles, be moderate in the consumption of heavy, rich foods, substitute as far as possible soups, broths, fresh milk, and drink water—lets of water. Take plenty of time to eat, and don't eat after you have had enough, even if it does taste good. If your work is confining take a moderate amount of exercise each day in the open air.

Of course, neither diet, water, rest nor exercise will cure these afflictions. I advise them as preventives only. For the benefit of the readers of this article who are now afflicted with Rheumatism, Kidney, Bladder or Urinary trouble, and desire to be cured quickly, I give below, camplete in every detail, the famous prescription which has made me so successful in the treatment of these diseases that I have ever used. It is pleasant to take, it is not expensive, it can be filled by any daugsist, and I believe it is the greatest prescription for Rheumatism, Kidney and Bladder Trouble ever written. It is also a valuable spring tonic and blood purifier. If you are a sufferer, save this, take it to your druggist and have it filled, or get the ingredients and mix them at home.

Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic, ½ ounce.

Concentrated Barkola Compound, I ounce.

Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic, ½ drachm.

Aromatic Elixir, 4 ounces.

Adult dose, take one teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime; children, one-fourth to one-half teaspoonful after meals.

After you are cured follow the advice I have given you in regard to diet, exercise and water, and you will not need the services of a physician again for these ailments.

Few Words by the Editor

.s the month of June
The month of leaves and roses,
/hen pleasant sights salute the eyes,
And pleasant scents the noses.
—N. P. Willis.

UNE is the month of brides. Many of your friends will take life partners this month, and start housekeeping. You are thinking of a present you would like to give them that will last and do good service, and yet not be too great a drain on your purse. You can't quite make up your mind what to give the young couple. Let us solve the difficulty for you. Send us fifty cents, and we will send them COMPORT for four years. Every month for four long years you will be brought to their minds. "Here comes COMPORT," the bride will say, "wasn't it sweet of Nellie to send us that?" "Indeed it was," replies the husband, "and by the way it is the only present that hasn't worn out, but is always fresh, new and interesting." Don't forget that in giving such a present you are bestowing a hundred dollars' worth of happiness for fifty cents, possibly more, as the enjoy-UNE is the month of brides. Many of stowing a nundred dollars worth of happiness for fifty cents, possibly more, as the enjoyment, information, and inspiration, that can be derived from a good magazine like COMFOET, cannot be measured by dollars and cents.—the value is in fact incalculable. This is our June suggestion for our millions of friends and embers here and we trust many will avail subscribers, and we trust many will avail themselves of it, and also the many other splendid offers to club raisers, which can be found in the pages of this charming and in-teresting issue of your favorite magazine.

The Peace Conference which recently met in New York, and to which flocked delegates from all over the world, is a remarkable sign of our times, and gives strong proof of the world's advancement. Holy Writ says, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God." Not until men are entirely at peace with each other will they be surely His children. Universal Peace is very much in the air, but the fact that nations are meeting to discuss it is a proof that in the not very distant future, the lion will lie down with the lamb, the roar of cannon, the crash of musketry, and the flashing of steel will vanish forever. At present the nations of the world are armed to the teeth, but they are armed for defence, and not for offence. No nation will make war upon another, until every art of diplomacy has been exhausted to avert bloodshed. Nations do not fly at each other's throats like bulldogs, as they did of old. Fighting once was man's only trade. Professions of arms, the only business that seriously occupied men's minds. It is different today, Modern nations know that war is hell; that it not only means bloodshed, but it often means ruin, for war has become so expensive that even the victor is weighed down by a load of debt, which halts national development, and permanently impoverishes and enslaves those who indulge in it. As Garfield said, "after the battle, the dead must be buried, and the bills must be paid." War cannot be wasged without money, and few nations now can afford to indulge in this costliest of all methods of settling international disputes. It is the monied kings, more than the crowned monarchs who rule the world today, and Czar and Kaiser must first consult with bankers and financiers, before they can call out their legions, and marshal their hosts in battle array. As 90 per cent of the world's business is done upon before they can call out their legions, and marshal their hosts in battle array. As 90 per cent. of the world's business is done upon credit, it is very evident that war stops and disturbs business more than anything else, imperils national credit, and is therefore an enterprise that fluenciers do not care to back prise that financiers do not care to back.

The Hague Peace Tribunal is being more and more resorted to by nations for the settlement of international disputes. Over two hundred international disputes have been settled by this Tribunal, and probably in the course of time, nations will mutually agree, that the judges at the Hague shall arbitrate all differences, and settle all troubles that arise between them.

Our readers naturally look to us for some comment on the great questions of the day, and your editor would be lacking in his duty to you, if he did not give you his views on the matters now at issue between the government, and the railroads. Of course there are a good many ramifications, and complications, which make this question a difficult one to thoroughly grasp. Briefly, the railroad situation can be summed up thus: The railroads want to run their properties in their own way, regardless of whether that way is for the best interests of the public or not. Hence we have had to pay the highest prices for the carrying of merchandise and passengers, and have had to be content frequently with the most wretched of service and inadequate facilities, which in their turn have resulted in terrible slaughter, and loss of life from coast to coast.

The first shadow on the railroad horizon was the passing of the "Rate Bill," which made it illegal for railroads to discriminate in the matter of freights. Hitherto, special rates and rebates have been given certain favored corporations, with the result that small shippers have been unable to compete with their more powerful rivals, and in consequence have been nave been unable to compete with their more powerful rivals, and in consequence have been forced out of business. By the giving of re-bates, and stock manipulation in Wall Street, the railroads incurred the antagonism, and in many cases the open hostility of vast masses of many cases the open hostility of vast masses of the American people. It was obvious that this state of things could not go on forever. An aroused public sentiment has demanded honesty in office; new ideals, and a square deal for all have of late years been insisted on by all good citizens in this country. Great combina-tions of capital are now regarded, even by some of the men who control them, as a public trust. The government does not wish to har-ass the railroads, but it insists that these wast ass the railroads, but it insists that these vast properties be run in a fair, square and above-board manner. In the early days of railroads, those who controlled them were practical men who took an interest in their properties, and ran them solely for the benefit of the public ran them solely for the benefit of the public and the stockholders. Honest management was the old ideal. The old system has passed away, and with it, the old ideals.

The total capitalization of the railroads of the United States is, $13,000,000,000. It is computed that of this tremendous sum, one half is "water," in other words they have been capitalized for just double their value. One half this sum, therefore represents fictitious values, values that do not exist, but the public nevervelt who determined to put the railroad business on a foundation of solid honesty. It was ness on a foundation of solid honesty. It was thought that a valuation of railroad properties in this country would be made, and the water squeezed out of stocks, and fictitious values done away with. The bare thought of this caused a tremendous panic in Wall Street. President Roosevelt, however, realized that much of this watered stock had been paid for in good faith by small investors, and he has decided that nothing will be done along these lines, as any drastic legislation in this direction would work incalculable hardship to the small holders of railroad securities.

For a long time the railroads have had it all different, until President Roosevelt said that what the states would not do, the national government must. State legislatures, feeling that their rights were imperiled, at once woke up, and passed drastic railroad legislation. This has brought about amusing results. At first the railroads looked upon the states as their creatures, but they had a somewhat wholesome dread of Washington, and the strenuous man who controlled matters there. When individual states awakened, and began to throw bombshells into the railroad camp. to throw bombshells into the railroad camp, the railroad magnates rushed to Washington to throw bombshells into the railroad camp, the railroad magnates rushed to Washington for protection.

The railway financiers have their troubles. The fear of government legislation has frightened investors, and the result is that the railroads cannot get the money needed for the development and improvement of their properties, and they are demanding that public agitation cease and legislation be stopped, or disaster must come. Railroads, hitherto have not been managed either for the benefit of the public or the stockholders, but have been run, in the majority of cases, solely in the interests of a few great financiers who control them. It is the government aim and purpose to merely exercise such control as will insure honesty of management. This will result in vast benefits, both for the public, and the stockholders. It will stop stock manipulation, and Wall Street jugglery, and this will be a blessing to the public, and will harm only those whose pockets are already stuffed to repletion.

With the railroad business on a sound financial basis, public confidence will be immediately restored, and men of small means, who have a few hundred dollars, fetching three and one half per cent. in savings banks, will withdraw the money from these institutions, and buy the money from these institutions, and buy railroad stocks which will bring them anywhere from five to ten per cent. interest per Railroads have nothing to fear. The profits Railroads have nothing to fear. The profits of last year averaged over $3,000 for every mile of track in the country. This prosperity is not threatened, but its continuance is positively assured. With a thorough understanding bebetween the public and the railroads, and with Uncle Sam to see that the agreements are kept and laws respected, everything will be well, and a greater era of prosperity will dawn, both for the railroads and the people, than has ever been known before. for the railroads been known before.

What is said to be the biggest diamond in the world is reposing in a bank on Holland Viaduct in London. The name of the bank is kept a profound secret. Lightning-drawing Trees

"Maybe the lightning doesn't hit things any oftener these days, than it used to do," remarked an old chap whose memory ran back into the distant past, "but it seems to me that it does. Maybe it is because we have so many newspapers these days telling the news, and we hear of lightning strikes oftener. Anyway, every time there is a thunderstorm we hear of something being hit, and a good many times it is fatal to human life. So far the government hasn't kept statistics of lightning fatalities, but last year the experts figured it up as 320 with several states not reporting. That is, about one every day in the year, and plenty enough to warn the rest of us that the lightning isn't harmless, and that people who are afraid of it have a right to be. A good many of the killed have been struck while seeking shelter from the rain under trees, and still whenever the rain begins, the people who are anywhere near a tree run to it for shelter. It is very much safer to stay in the open and get wet, unless the tree is a beech. Nobody knows why, but the beech seems to be immune, and the lightning very rarely strikes it. We have not kept a record of the trees most liable to be struck, but in England reports show that the dangerous trees are the oak, elm, poplar and ash. One of the most disastrous strokes occurring in New York happened to a lot of people under an elm tree in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, ash. One of the most disastrous strokes occurring in New York happened to a lot of people under an elm tree in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, this past summer. European statistics show the following trees as most likely to be hit, those near the water being more dangerous than those away from it: oaks, 100; elm, 77; pines, 33; fir, 10; beeches, by far the safest, only 2. Birch and maple are two others that are comparatively safe. Still, it is better to get wet than to risk shelter under any kind of a tree. In some sections of the West, farmers in the fields stay out in the open and take the rain, preferring that even to shelter in a house or barn. They even lie down on the ground to present as small a mark as possible, and some have gone so far as to have 'dugouts' in the ground. In a prairie country anything that rises above the surface of the general dead level is a fair mark. We don't hear much about the is a fair mark. We don't hear much about the lightning striking the skyscraper buildings in cities, but a friend of mine tells me that during a half hour thunderstorm in New York one afternoon the lightning struck thirteen times in a territory a mile long and half a mile wide. in a territory a mile long and half a mile wide. This was in a neighborhood where there were no high buildings, and excepting one or two flag poles, most of the strokes were down as low as the street lamps and several wagons were hit. So far we haven't done much toward protecting people from lightning, and maybe we never can, but I think it is about time the scientists were getting to work to see if something can't be done."

Strawberries and Rheumatism

"There seems to be a notion among a good many people," said a doctor-looking party, "that the acid in strawberries is bad for rheumatism, and I know a lot of people who won't eat them on that account, notwithstanding Dean Swift told the truth when he said: 'Doubtless the Lord could have made a better berry than the strawberry, but doubtless the Lord never did.' Some people find them indigestible, and liable to sour on the stomach, but they will not find them so, if they will not eat them with cream or milk. But as far as rheumatism is concerned, the strawberry is not more rheumatic than any other acid fruit and we can prove it by authority of long standing. Away back yonder, Linneus, the naturalist, kept himself from rheumatism by eating strawberries. Fontenelli, another one, said his longevity was due to strawberries and he used them as a medicine. Borheave, an authority, classed the strawberry with the principal red fruit remedies containing iron, as well as phosphorus, salt, sulphur and sugar. Taking the strawberry by and large, I think it is not only one of the finest fruits grown, but it is as safe as any and can be eaten by people with rheumatism without fear of making it worse. safe as any and can be eaten by people with rheumatism without fear of making it worse. Whether they will make it better, as in the case of Linnsons, I can't say."

Concerning Divorce

"It used to be," said the man with a married look on his face, "that it was almost as bad as scandal to be divorced, and in the rural communities especially, a divorced person was hardly considered respectable. Indeed, divorced people were so scarce in the country that if one did become to show un anywhere the motor. did happen to show up anywhere, the rest of the community didn't know exactly what course to pursue—call on the pastor to pray for the sinners or call for the officers of the law. But that has changed in recent years and the latest census returns show that the country people are acquiring the habit of getting rid of undesirable domestic burdens. It is said they are doing this because of an increased knowledge of the divorce laws and the publicity given to the matter by the newspapers. One reason, in my judgment, not given officially, is that the country people who look to the cities for their rules of social usage find that divorced people are quite as prominent in city society as any other and quite as highly esteemed, so they are simply following suit. I know that divorces are rapidly increasing, and the census report shows that while from 1867 to 1886, there were only 328,000 divorces granted, during the next twenty years ending in 1906, there were over a million. Brooklyn, New York, has the lowest number, 23 to the 100,000 of population. Chicago has 107. Philadelphia, 63, while in Cincinnati there was a fifteen-fold increase, Kansas City ten and Indianapolis four. Records are so poorly kept in New York City that the officials couldn't get an average, but it is probably greater than any of them, though there is but one cause for divorce in that state. It's none of my business, maybe, but I'm here to say that we ought to be getting back to the good old times when it wasn't considered respectable to break the marriages ties. Public sentiment, not legislation, is the only remedy."

After deciding on the size the first step is, as usual, the drawing of the thread after allowing Fold this evenly, baste down and hemstitch all around, this finished one is ready for the border. This is worked by passing the thread from one side of the center to the other, knot-ting the threads into groups, after which the butterflies are darned into the corners. In selecting linen for drawnwork choose a piece with round smooth threads and as free from dressing as possible.

A beginner of this work can get good practice by working the borders shown in Nos. 1 and 2, which are simpler though similar in design.

Original Design for Collars and Cuffs in Embroidery

The popularity of the turn-over collar and cuffs seems to increase, rather than diminish. Ruchings are frail, and expensive on that account, lasting only a short time, and then, too, they are not as becoming as the dainty white turn-over effects against the neck and hands.

Collars and cuffs are made of lawn or linen; the lawn should be fairly heavy, to wear well.

hand-embroidered accessories, as that wears as long as the work in it lasts, but of course it is expensive; however, so little is needed, for the narrow bands, that it comes within the means of almost everyone. That without dressing should be used, it is soft but firm.

Butcher's linen and pique are used when heavier, coarser embroidery is to be done.

The designs shown herewith which are specially adaptable for the fine linen or lawn on collars, are Figs. 1, 3 and 5. Fig. 1 is called the Strawberry design. The leaves falling over the berry and those on the vine and the vine itself are worked in solid embroidery, and the berry is worked in seed stitch. Fig. 2 shows the design in actual size, which can be traced with tracing paper and transferred to the linen with impression paper.

is done by running two threads of mercerized linen or cotton floss the length of the stems, and fairly solidly lengthwise each leaf. Then and fairly solidly lengthwise each leaf. Then with one thread, embroider the stems over and over, solidly, and the leaves across. Draw the floss fairly tight, but not so tight that the linen will be wrinkled underneath. Fill in berries with seed stitch, which is a sort of back stitch, very short, not so close together that the linen is entirely covered, however, as it should show between the stitches. Pad the edge of the collar by running heavy threads the full length, and embroidering with buttonhole stitch, over padding, with one thread. Cut edge close to embroidery. Lay, wrong side up, on several thicknesses of flannel on ironing board; lay a wet cloth over it and press with hot

When all done, carefully cut away the linen over the lace, close to embroidered edges; great care must be used not to cut the lace underneath. The lace used for any work of this kind should be delicate and open in pattern, but durable in texture. A fine Valenciennes may be used, or point d'esprit, allowing the dot to come in the center of openings, if possible. Points to Remember Always write on one side of the paper only and leave space between the lines.

Write recipes, hints and requests on separate paper in-stead of including them in the letters.

Mail all letters at least three MONTHS before the issu for which they are intended.

Always give your correct name and address, as no letter will be published excepting over it. This enables the sisters to write directly to each other.

anything unless stated that they can be supplied.

As it has come to our notice that sisters have been asking certain sums for information and patterns that should have been furnished free, we here give notice that no charge should be made or money asked for any offers of assistance or information which have or will appear in any letters here published; should there be, kindly notify us, and the offender will be denied the further use of these columns. As this department is run solely to afford an opportunity for the mutual exchange of ideas, recipes, and helpful information, we do not intend it to be used by anyone for a commercial purpose.

writes:
This corner is like a visit from old friends, and though I have never written a word before, in heart and mind I am in the ranks.

Many of the letters take me back to my younger days and give much comfort and encouragement to an old lady of sixty-one. I can truly sympathize with the shut-ins, for I have had rheumatism for twenty years, but only lightly—twice have been laid up for a few days. I thank God I am as well as I am, and pity all who suffer from this dread disease.

Next comes a young mother, whose baby certainly is fortunate; she writes:

I noticed in one of the letters that a sister told how many grandparents her baby had. I have a baby boy, ten months old, named Clarence Cleo, who has four great grandmothers, one great-grandfathers, two grandfathers, and two grandmothers living. He has seen all of them excepting one great-grandfather. How many babies fair better than this?

Mrs. Mollie Carper, Hico, Texas, wrote an in-teresting letter, from which we quote the follow

I am a new but interested reader. I saw I am a new but interested reader. I saw a letter from a lady who lives in the same Co. in Mo., in which I spent my first years; how it made me think of childhood days, and I dreamed of our old home and its surroundings, the pretty woods I played in with two little brothers, in happy days gone by. We lived in Summerville, Texas Co., on what used to be the Trailkill place, till I was thirteen, and now I am thirty-one, with two sweet little girls of my own. As I have drifted a long distance from the old home, I should enjoy hearing from sisters living in that vicinity.

A sister who is naturally reluctant to sign her full name strikes a true note when she says:
Dear sisters, and especially young sisters,
I would say to you all, never marry excepting for love. I was married at seventeen, I was alone, in poor health, had to work for my living, and I wanted a home. I married a good man and one who is kind to me, but in every married life there are shadows as well as sunshine, and I know how hard it is to be patient when the shadows come, if love is lacking. I know life is not what it would be if I truly loved my husband. Besides I believe love comes to all sooner or later, and what if it comes too late. Heed my warning, dear ones, and let nothing but love ever induce you to take the fatal step. Better, I say, starvation in a workhouse than a loveless marriage.

starvation in a worknouse than a loveless marriage.

I wonder how many have ever had this experience of which Mrs. Gauthier writes:

Let us all plant some Morning Glories and try it. She says:

I wonder if any of the sisters ever saw Morning Glories opening. One morning last summer I was out on the back porch which was covered with Morning Glories. Looking up, I saw a beautiful sight, all the buds unfolded. The next morning I got up before five o'clock so I might see them open again. I sat near the vines, the buds were all closed up tightly. Suddenly, yet softly, without even the faintest whisper of a sound, but with the merest trembling of the vine, all the little white buds opened at the same time. It was not more than six seconds after they began to open before the last bud had been unfolded. It seems that just as the morning air reached a certain degree of lightness, all the flowers came open. There were a few ill-shaped and deformed ones which did not open so readily. This little experience gave me a deeper love for flowers and a deeper love for the good Lord who fashioned them so wonderfully.

From Pennslyvania comes the following:

I first thought I must express my gratitude and appreciation of Comfort, as I have found so many good things to help me in various ways, in these columns. I do feel sorry for the shutins, and am going to try and see if I cannot give them a little sunshine, this very day. When I am doing my work, I often look around my little home, and although humble, I feel my heart swelling with thankfulness to God, for giving me so much. I have one of the bost husbands, and dear sisters, I try to be everything to him, and he appreciates me. I am the mother of three bouncing boys, and have my hands full to overflowing, but am trying with God's help to lead the little feet in the right path. I find it very hard sometimes, two, at least, are so different in disposition, that what benefits one, does harm to the other.

To the sister who suffers from salt-rheum or tetter try the following:

Take potato peclings and boil in plenty of water, then wash hands in the liquid as hot as one can stand, doing this two or three times a day. I have used this with success, when a dozen of salves failed.

MRS. R. F. SAYRE, 5021 Osceola St., Hazelwood, Pa. From Pennslyvania comes the following:

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON AND SISTERS:
From this beautiful sunny clime I send greeting to you all. How rapidly time flies. It seems only a short while since I last wrote, yet seems only a short while since I last wrote, yet over a year has glided by, and with its passing, changes have come to hearts and homes. Many of the sisters have been made to bow under the chastening rod. Some speak of having to give up loved ones, I can sympathize with them as only one, who has passed through the same sorrow, can. Let us all cast our care upon the Lord, for He alone can give real comfort.

My sympathy is also with those dear motherless ones, for what is home without a mother, they are always so ready to help us in every little trial.

What a privilege we should not neglect. How different it will be when they are gone, when we no more are greeted by the sweet smile of welcome.

Now a word about the children. Of late there has been considerable said about rearing them and the best method of commandi with him, to my sorrow I found he had a most irritable and ungovernable temper, and so self-willed he would pounce upon his little brother at the least provocation. Then I was confronted with the grave responsibility of a mother's duty. Nothing short of the rod would do, but with the help of Him who shows us our duty, I taught the little fellow to control his temper, and now that he is grown up it would be hard to find a young man with a sweeter disposition and better control of his temper. He also loves and respects his mother. I speak of this for the benefit of some mother who is having the same trial, and say it is better to command obedience and teach a child self-control when it is young, even though you have to resort to the rod, and it costs you many tears, than to dispense with discipline and suffer the trials which will surely follow later.

We should never punish our child in an angry mood, and when we are forced to correct them should let them know that it grieves us, and that it is only for their good that we do it. I have known parents who would even allow their children to strike them when they were punishing them in a kindly way, and have thought of the sorrow which would surely be theirs in after years.

MRS. EDITH TRENHALLE, Ericson, Wheeler Co., Neb.

My IDEARS:
Some of my dear bachelor girls wish me to enlighten them regarding what to take on short trips that can be carried in a suit case? What one's pocketbook will allow is an important feature. For traveling, nothing is better than a skirt and jacket of some light-weight serge goods, mohair, panama or brilliantine, gray is the best color, with shirt-waist of gray china silk, gloves to match, hat can be a pian white straw sailor trimmed with band of white or gray, with white veil to cover the entire hat and to the under the chin, the veil can be removed at any time, of course, or if one wishes to wear a dressy hat, provide a soft, large paper sack, into which the hat can be placed during a journey or dusty ride, and a cap donned in its place which can be bought most anywhere for twenty-five cents. The paper sack containing hat can be tied into the suit case or hung up in the car, out of harm's way. With this costume it would be well to have a white shirt-waist, gloves and canvas shoes, and if on the cars, one can retire to the toilet-room and dust, brush, and shake off the dust and soot, don the white waist, shoes, gloves, etc., and lo! you are transformed, and will look cool and neat. As to the contents of the suit case, if going where you will be required to have an evening toilette, a silk, or some of the light pretty goods, with a fancy waist, will be necessary, and let me give you girls all a hint right here, if the said dress has any color about it, say trimmed with pink ribbons, provide yourself with some silk or satin to match the ribbon, and cover a pair of black slippers with it. I have known them to be covered so nicely and neatly, that one could dance in them for an entire evening, mind, I do not advise the dancing, as that is a pretty severe test on them.

For morning wear nothing is cooler than test on them.

For morning wear nothing is cooler than a shirt-waist suit made of anything sheer and pretty from five cent goods up as high as the purse will permit. For underwear a dark-colored petticoat of light-weight goods, with under petticoat to match (if any is required, for a full figure it is not advisable to wear too many,) one white petticoat would be necessary for the light-colored dress. Gauze underwear in one or two piece suits (as one's fancy dictates), hosiery; black for all round wear, or match costume if liked, white with the white shoes, and pink, if pink slippers are worn. Still another suggestion should one wish a pair of blue hose, buy a pair of white cotton and dip them in bluing as dark as desired. Now for the nightdresses; one of the most cool and delightful is china silk of any color; it can be utilized as a lounging robe, too. Two nightgowns made of thin cheap cotton cloth, half lownecked, with elbow sleeves, do not take up much space.

Dear Comport Family:

Good morning! Did you ever really think what that word means, good, yes, good morning? This is a beautiful world to live in, only mankind is out of harmony with God. I thought last fall that the weather was as near perfect as one could desire, the winter followed, just cold enough to be healthful and pleasant to most folks here, but as I am not burdened with any surplus flesh, the cold got right next to my bones, even if the mercury did not go below zero, and now the beautiful spring with its gladsome sunshine, its balmy breezes, flowers and song-birds are right around me, yes, and the little chickens.

I am afflicted, and seldom go from home, but I

I am afflicted, and seldom go from home, but I Ilve on a hill in a lovely neighborhood. I can look away to the west and see the mountains, and to the southeast and see the town and University, where our boys and girls go to prepare for useful lives. If I had a trumpet sufficient, I'd stand right here and call every ambitious boy and girl from the remotest corner of our state, and girl from the remotest corner of our state, and tell them to come to the fountain and drink deep from the wells of knowledge, and get ready to live, and be assured that he who lives right will die right. There have been many diamonds in the rough that by almost a superhuman effort got here, and after staying five or six years went away polished and beautiful. I would tell all the other boys and girls to ask and find out how they can enter their State University, the matriculation fee is almost nothing, and no tuition. Some of them can pay their board in part or all, working in private families, and the cost of board at the dormitories is little. My boy pays part of his way working at the Experiment Station, which is very helpful in learning how to work, that counts for much to a fatherless boy.

I pity the shut-ins. If I could, I would take each one to my heart and say, be patient, think less about self and more of God and other people, and the dear old mother of whom I recently read; her three sons, well-to-do men, permitted her to go to the poorhouse. Shame on such sons and daughters, who will mistreat the author of their being. I believe parents and children according to their ability should do what they can in the home. Never let anything, over which we have control, keep us away from church, for there is where we can usually get spiritual food, and food we must have. Right here I want to say that I sit to cook, wash and iron, to be sure I have to stand and wash some. I would say to the rheumatic, sleep in a sumry room, and live in the sunshine as much as possible, and drink soft water.

Can anyone tell me from experience or abservation, if the ocean or gulf coast baths will cu I am amicred, and seldom go from nome, out a live on a hill in a lovely neighborhood. I can look away to the west and see the mountains, and to the southeast and see the town and Uni-

THE TRIAL OF SKILL.

THE TRIAL OF SKILL.

HE young men who were to engage in the trial of skill were already on the ground. On a similar occasion among the whites there would doubtless have been a large amount of noise and confusion, but here, on the contrary, the most perfect decorum reigned.

The rival archers formed a group by themselves. Whatever might have been their feelings towards each other, in reference to the approaching contest, nothing appeared in their faces but that impassive look with which an Indian so successfully veils his real thoughts.

When, however, Long Arrow, the chief led

In removing the bark, however, an inner ring had been left, and while an arrow striking anywhere within the circle would indicate fair skill, it was expected that the best archers would hit within the inner ring, in which the exact center had been marked as nearly as could be indicated. To his this at such a distance would require hit this at such a distance would require a degree of skill that might well entitle the one who displayed it to the glory and the meed of "My children, you have come to see which can draw the best bow. The daughter of Long Arrow is before you." Here he pointed to Waurega, who modestly cast down her eyes.

The chief proceeded to reiterate his assurance of the morning that he who came out of the approaching contest a victor should lead Waurega to his wigwam as his wife.

The signal to commence was now given, and according to previous arrangement, one of the number stepped forward, and drawing his bow to the proper position, let fly the arrow.

It was with a glance unconsciously appealing that she looked at Okanoga as he approached the stand.

The young man's air was cool and composed. His step was elastic, and he did not appear to fear for the result. He appeared strikingly handsome as he stood in an attitude of careless grace, with one foot placed a little before the other. More than Waurega looked upon him as the Adonis of the tribe, and more than one would have been glad to win him from the chief's daughter. So among the maidens it was generally hoped that he would be unsuccessful in the present trial, as he would then be obliged to seek another bride. The men in the tribe, except those personally interested, were, on the contrary, hopeful of his success. But all, whatever might be their feelings, watched with the greatest interest the appearance of this last champion, whose good or ill success would decide the question.

Though not flustered, Okanoga evidently felt the responsibility of his position. With a

He took the hand of his unresisting daughter and said: "I have seen the bow of Okanoga, and it is strong. I marked the flight of his arrow, and it was swift. It struck the mark. Okanoga's arrow is the best. Let him lead the daughter of the chief to his wig-

John had not made his appearance among the contestants. His father's eye scanned anxiously the ranks of the young men, and he could not see him. His heart sank within him, for he had set his heart upon his son's embracing this chance of winning back his lost reputation.

It occurred to him, however, that he might be preparing his bow. But when one after another stepped up and discharged his arrow, the father became uneasy, and stole away from the crowd, taking his way to his own

CHAPTER XIX.

FATHER AGAINST SON.

The iron had entered deeply into the soul of the shamed and indignant Indian father. In proportion as he had been proud of the skill and promise of his son, he felt a like sorrow at the bitter disappointment of his most cherished hopes. He remembered the fondness with which he had watched the youthful gambols of his child—dearer to him because an only son, his first and last born. He remembered how even then he felt proud of the boy's superiority to his playfellows, and looked boy's superiority to his playfellows, and looked forward with hope to his assuming by right forward with hope to his assuming by right of merit a place in the tribe second only to that of the chief. There came back to him a hundred trifles—yet no trifles in a father's remembrance—on which he had dwelt fondly when his son was yet in the freshness of his untainted youth, ere he had bowed his knee to the idol which the whites had set up to lure their people to destruction.

Even after he began to develop the fatal

Even after he began to develop the fatal taste that had become so strong, he hoped for the best; that his son would break away from the unworthy habit which was sapping the foundations of his manhood, and once more walk erect in all the consciousness of his strength and superiority over his fellows.

strength and superiority over his fellows.

But now these hopes were forever at an end. John had resisted the strongest inducement which could possibly be brought to bear upon him. He had had it in his power at one bound to vault back into his wonted place. Reputation and affection alike combined to bid him put under his feet the serpent which enthralled him. But notwithstanding all these motives to conquer his appetite, if only a whort motives to conquer his appetite, if only a short time, he had ignominiously fallen a victim to the bottle. The father felt that this decided the matter. After this his son's reformation was no longer to be hoped. For the remainder of his life he was destined to wear the degrading chains of the enslaver, bringing disgrace upon himself, upon his father, and upon his

This thought was bitter in the extreme to the proud old man. A spirit akin to that of the Roman father rose in his heart, and he resolved to take a step which only utter despair could prompt; that he would take away that life which, if spared, would be spent in such humiliating subjection. No longer should the smile of derision appear on the faces even of smile of derision appear on the faces even of the children, when his son staggered home in helpless inebriety. It would be a grievous thing to be childless by his own act, but he saw no alternative. He did not stop to re-gard the consequences to himself. Probably they would not be serious, parental authority being greater among the Ingians than with the whites, and he would be regarded as hav-ing acted not without some proyection; but ing acted not without some provocation; but even if the act were to be followed by his own death, this consideration, would not have stayed his hand. He was an Indian and had all the Indian contem z of death. The assertion and protection of his own honor he looked upon as of much more moment than the question of life.

Long did the father ponder in bitterness of soul on his son's degradation before he came with his keen eye he fixed upon the central spot, and aimed for that. His arrow was discharged amid the greatest excitement on the part of the spectators. A moment of suspense, and quivered in the target's very center.

There was a loud murmur of applause, in which some even of the disappointed joined. They applauded the shot rather than the archer. When the question was thus settled. Okanoga drew aside, and lifting his eyes to the face of the chief, modestly waited for him to speak.

He took the hand of his unresisting daugher and said: "I have seen the bow of Okapara and said: "I have seen the bow of Okapa honorable fame, and he had reserved it as the last and crowning work of this, his trusty companion in a hundred skirmishes, to put an of to the life of his son.

Then the thought arose: It was her son as well as his that he was about to slay. When they met in the happy hunting grounds, would she not reproach him? This thought called up others which appealed to the paternal tenderness with which he had once regarded his only child, and which, in spite of

He was so far recovered from the effects of his intoxication as to regard with astonishment the aspect and attitude of his father.
"What would my father do?" he asked, hardly comprehending the real purpose of his father. "What has his son done?" demanded the father bitterly. "Has he not brought shame to the lodge of his father, and made himself to be laughed at by the women and the boys?"

"Who laughs at John?" demanded the young man, with a touch of his ancient fierceness.
"Show him to me, and my knife shall drink his blood."

The father laughed a hitter, mocking laugh "John has sold himself to the English for their fire water. He is no longer a man. He has become a woman. Once he could shoot, but he can do so no more. All the young men shoot better than he."

"It is a lie!" said the son fiercely.
Strangely enough, the father seemed to look Strangely enough, the father seemed to look with stern joy upon these ebullitions of his son's anger. Had he meekly acquiesced in the reproaches, his heart would have hardened against him, and he might yet have carried out his purpose. But he recognized in the young man's impatience a remnant of the ancient spirit which he feared had died out in his heart. heart.

He continued: "The young men tried their He continued: "The young men tried their bows to see which would shoot the best arrow, and lead the daughter of the chief to his wig-wam. The breath of the young man came fast, and he glared at his father with a look of determined hostility and he giared at his lather with a look of determined hostility.

"John is not a dog. He is a great brave," he muttered sullenly.

His father laughed in derision.

"He is a dog, a drunken dog," he reiterated.

"Let him go and live among dogs. The lodge of his father is no longer for him. His father casts him out. Let

The young man cast an anguished look at his father. This was a measure which he had not contemplated: to be cast out in this way not contemplated; to be east out in this way was the deepest humiliation.

"Does my father mean what he says?" he asked, unwilling to believe without further confirmation what had first been uttered.

"He is a father no longer—he has no son, for his son has become a stranger to him."

John heard this sentence of banishment with feelings of dismay and grief, but he was too proud to exposulate with his father. or too proud to expostulate with his father, or seek a reversal of the sentence. With that proud resignation which is characteristic of an Indian he merely replied: "It is good. John has no father."

Then, staggering to his feet, he left the wigwam with a gait slightly unsteady and, without looking back, took his way to the

His father looked after him with an anguished spirit, and a feeling of loneliness and desolation settled down upon him. But he was glad that he had not obeyed his first im-pulse and taken his son's life.

CHAPTER XX.

THE LAWYER IS PUT UNDER BONDS.

When Indian John left his father's wigwam he well understood that the sentence that had been passed upon him was no mere impulsive act upon his parent's part, which might be re-voked at the end of a few hours, but was final. Henceforth he was left to shift for himself. He must make up his mind what course to pursue. He could not hope to rejoin his tribe. pursue. He could not hope to rejoin his tribe. They would undoubtedly sustain his father in the course he had adopted. Besides, in spite of his degradation, he had too much pride to wish reconciliatory terms that would no doubt involve humiliation to himself.

So far as the supply of his necessities was concerned he felt no alarm. He had his bow and arrows with him, and the woods would supply him with game.

As he had eaten nothing since morning, he felt the necessity of immediately looking out

As he had eaten nothing since morning, he felt the necessity of immediately looking out for some game. He had now so far recovered from the effects of his potation that he could trust himself to shoot without the apprehension of failing from an unsteady hand.

As if in answer to the call of his necessity a As if in answer to the call of his necessity a noble deer sped by him not five minutes after he had commenced looking about him. With the rapidity of one accustomed to its use, John raised his bow, and adjusting the arrow with celerity, sped it on its death-dealing way. The hunter's aim was unerring. The shaft overtook and brought low the noble game.

The Indian was advancing on his prey when a sharp sound was heard, and the convulsive movement of the deer testified that a second weapon had done its work. He was at once the victim of the red man's bow and the white man's musket. A moment afterward the one who had dis-

UMMER COMFORT is a trifle smaller than Winter Comfort, and as a result my chin music this month is somewhat curtailed, which will be a great relief to you, and a great cause of sorrow and pain to me.

I regret to say Toby is not feeling very well just now; he has had a rush of barks to the head, and is feeling quite delicatessen. Maria wishes you to understand that she is a feline, and quite feminine, in other words, she's a cat of the gentler sex, but is none the less a lady, even if she does wear a fur coat, and has four legs.

Thanks to the generosity of Cousin A. V. Hester, Dallas, R. F. D., 3, Texas, ten shutins have each been presented with a copy of Uncle Charlie's poems. I asked you all to get up a club of seven subscribers at fifteen cents, and win this book, as I want every League member to have something to remember me by when I drop out of the life line. Only a few out of the 20,000 League members responded. From this I gather that your affection for me is not very deep, as it is the first time I ever asked you to do a favor for me. I hope for better results this month.

Now, if you'll hop up into my lap, we'll get busy with the letters, and lovely letters they are too, and I send you my warmest and bestest love, and deepest gratitude for all the beautiful missives you indite me, and may God bless you all, is my fevent prayer.

A little Texas girl wants to speak a piece. HENLEY, TEXAS, March 10, 1907. DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

A little Texas girl wants to speak a piece.

HENLEY, TEXAS, March 10, 1907.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

Is there room on your lap for one more poor little girl? I am sixteen years old, weigh one hundred and twenty-eight pounds, have light hair, blue eyes, fair complexion. Oh, I am awful pretty—that's what the boys tell me. I know "Uncle Chollie" would say so, too, if he could see me. Uncle, if you will come down here I'il give you a mess of cabbage. Well, Uncle, why didn't you come down and go with me to the "Old Confederate Soldiers' Reunion" at Driftwood, on Aug. 9, 10, and 11 last, it was surely nice, but oh, so sad to see the poor old soldiers, bent with age, get up on the stage and make a speech. You could see the tears stream down their cheeks. I saw the "soldiers' parade"—it was a fine sight to see them come stepping along, keeping time to the music. It was so sad to hear them tell of olden times, when the Indians would kill their wives, and blessed little children, and rob them of their homes, kill their horses and cattle, and nearly scare them to death. They also had skating, which was very interesting. There were several got hurt, but not serious. It's a beautiful sight to see them skate. Then they had a snake show. You pay your fifteen cents and go in and see a den full of snakes, and a man down in amongst them, and he never comes out of that den. He will bite off a snake's head and tear the skin from its back and eat the flesh. I also saw the petrified mummy; she was found twelve years ago, by some mining men. She still had the flesh on her bones. It was a terrible sight. She was an Indian squaw. I was riding on the hobby horse, and my head got swimming, and I fell off and nearly broke my neck. Now don't you feel sorry for me? As this is my first attempt, I won't stay long, as I know Uncle's leg is hurting. So, by by, dear Uncle. These kisses are for you. Well, that's enough for one time, now shake hands with your loving niece,

Belle, dear, I am sorry I was not at the Confederate reunion. They wanted me

Belle, dear, I am sorry I was not at the Confederate reunion. They wanted me to be a pioneer in the olden days, and I volunteered, but I did not stay in the biz long. I thought a pioneer was a man who ate pies, but when I found that it was a man who had to be killed by Injuns and other wild birds, I beat it back to the ancestral dump. Evidently, Belle, you had a regular circus and county fair on this occasion. I am sorry you fell off the merry-go-round, but these wooden horses will kick, and you have no right to ride on them, until they have been thoroughly tamed and broken to the and broken to the saddle. I used to be in the circus business once, but I had terrible bad luck. I had a fine collection of freaks and wild animals. I had a mule, and I used to paint stripes on him, and call him the mankilling zebra. One day during the grand procession, it rained and washed the stripes off, and the restood the mule. That's where I had to get out of collection of freaks

That's where I had to get out of town quick. I had bad luck with that show. The jaguar got on a jag, the panther lost his pants, the alligator dropped his gaiters, the bearded lady's whiskers fell out, the fat lady got thin, and the skeleton dude got so fat no railroad could haul him. The monkey got into the elephant's trunk, and stole his nightshirt and thirty-seven cents; then the educated flea got on a tear, and trod on the elephant's toe, and broke his leg. That show broke my heart, for I fell in love with a lady acrobat, a slack wire and trapeze artist, who did stunts up in midair.

She was a beautiful young girl of sixty-four. I fell in love with her because I wanted a woman I could look up to, but I never thought she would love me, as I was so far beneath her—about thirty feet—and she was so far above me. But, alas, she was a high flier, and always looked down on me, and when I tried to put a circus ring on her finger one day, she hit me in the eye with an acrobat. I went bankrupt with that show, and another man took it, and employed me as a bill poster. I had not had anything to eat for two days, when he gave me a ton of bills and two bags of flour, and told me to make paste, and stick of flour, and told me to make paste, and stick up the bills. Well, to make a short story long, I ate the flour, and the bills never went up. Oh, Belle, I've had some tough times in my career, but let's cheer up, the worst is yet to come. Thank you for the kisses, Belle, I have put them on ice, and will take one daily, so as to make them last as long as possible. possible.

Charlie, I am charmed with your letter, as we don't get many college graderates, excuse me, I mean graduates, butting into our select circle, and when we do, we like to make the most of them. I didn't edit or fix up your letter in any way Charlie, as I don't think a poor, humble ink squirter of my caliber has any right to monkey with the classic English, and the polished orthography of a college expurt, excuse me, I mean expert, such as you are. All I can say is, that spelling reform must have been a long suit of the Knowledge Joint, wherein you spent your youth, and if President Roosevelt and Carnegie knew the name of your college, I'll bet they'd fall on President Roosevelt and Carnegie knew the name of your college, I'll bet they'd fall on its roof, and weep tears of joy. You say you are now "in a druggist at work". What part of the druggist are you working in, his head, feet, or otherwise? I suppose the druggist needed some repair work in his soup tank, and finding his drugs useless, swallowed you, and you are putting a new cement floor and shingle roof on his dough box. Possibly you may be going to half sole and h el his liver pad. Anyyou are putting a new cement noor and sningle roof on his dough box. Possibly you may be going to half sole and h el his liver pad. Anyway I wisa, you joy of your work, and you certainly have a snug position and have got in on the ground floor, and have the inside track. As regards winning the love of the fair Lenora, whose name though you gave it, I thought it best to withhold, you might try candy, flowers, poetry, and if that doesn't do, you might try a love powder. There are, I believe, people who mix love potions that inspire affection in the coldest hearts, at a dollar a clip. Years ago, I was very muci congealed on a young thing who wasn't co ealed on me. Her old man had a wad that would have choked a cow. I bribed the colored waitress to drop the love potion in the fair one's afterdinner coffee, and I turned in the parlor about half a minute after she got the dose. The only trouble was, the old lady, her mother, got it by mistake, and I had no sooner put my foot on the parlor carpet, than the old lady came through the portieres like a skyrocket, and landed in my arms with a whoop. I said "darling," and kissed her twice before I realized who it was. I thought it was the daughter, but Fate had handed me a lemon, and it was Ma instead. Stung for fair. The old lady hung to me like the seven years' itch. I could not shake her or drop her, and as she weighed two hundred and eighty pounds, I couldn't run. All well, I trust. It seems like a breach of etiquette to call you "Uncle"—though I have been one of Comfort's silent readers for five or

I bought me two measures of tacks, took them home and made me some tacky pudding; also some tacky cake. I ate this, then went to the party. I am the best skater you know. Well, to my fondest horror, the prizes were tack puddings, also slices of tack cake, with tack icing on the top. I, being the best skater, won the prize. I ate 'em, but oh! Jerusalem, ever since then I have been tacky, oh! so very tacky! Uncle, what would you advise me to do?

This is a fine country, I do wish you would move down here. I will get you a nice position if you will come—a Government position. Uncle Sam keeps a whole platoon of wind-jammers on our streets to keep the industrious denizens from going to sleep. By, by, Uncle, your old ugly nephew,

I have had a good many attacks myself, but they were all external ones, and not internal ones like yours. A tack was put in my chair to sit on for a joke. Do you see the point? You don't? Well, I did, and felt it, too. Now Jim, you are (though far be it from me to discourage or scare you,) in a most dire and desperate condition. It is all very well to have a tacky manner, but to have a tacky interior is dangerous for man and beast. Iron is a good thing for the system, but you from is a good thing for the system, but you don't want to take it in too pointed a form. I go to the public school, and am in the seventh grade. We have very hard arithmetic and history, but the other studies (grammar, geography, physiology, spelling.) seem easy to me. We will soon take up Latin. Our examinations for the first half term were held the last week in January. I received very good marks, and if I pass in next term, I will be in the High School.

Our farm, which is of three hundred acres, has two miles water front. We have horses, pigs, cows, chickens and turkeys on the farm, and also nice vegetables, such as tomatoes, potatoes and cabbage, also apple and pear trees. We went black-berrying last summer and had a fine time. Uncle Charlie, did you ever go black-berrying? If you have never gone, don't go. V'all got full of chiga's, and if you don't know what they are, go black-berrying and find out.

I am very handy at sewing, as I can sew both on the machine and by hand. I can work doilies very nicely, indeed, and everybody that sees them, compliments me on being able to do such nice work.

Your loving niece and cousin,
DORIS CHASE (NO. 3,929.)

Doris, dear, I'm charmed with your letter. You say you have only one sister nine years old. May I ask how many sisters you expected to have of this age? Billy the Goat says he has sixteen sisters, each six months old, but I don't believe him. I should like to see the dark brown wood-works in your post-office. Is the postmaster chief engineer, and what is the motive force, steam or electricity? I did not know that Uncle Sam allowed wood manufacturing to be carried on in government buildings. Toby says his dark brown wood-works are all out of order, and Maria is putworks are all out of order, and Maria is putting a plaster of hog lard, hot coals, and mosquitoes' whiskers on his circumference, and that we will trust will put him in good shape. You ask me if I ever went black berrying. Yes, I assisted at the funeral of a colored gentleman, who was caught robbing a hen roost some years ago. That is the only black burying I have ever assisted at, and it was not the most enjoyable function in the world. And now, Doris, I have reached the most exciting part of your letter. You say you take And now, Doris, I have reached the most exciting part of your letter. You say you take a part in your entertainments, and on one particular patriotic affair you are going to take a part in several pieces. Oh, Doris, I blush for you. To take apart in one piece is bad enough, but to take apart in several pieces is the limit—it's terrible. Honestly, I am shocked at the very thought of a sweet, refined little girl like you, taking yourself apart in several pieces before a large audience of America's best people. To dismember yourself in the seclusion of your own apartments is bad enough, but to do it publicly, oh, fie'. Suppose you took yourself apart in thirty pieces and forgot just where the pieces belonged, and could not join them together again in the correct manner, think how dreadful that would be. Fancy walking around for the remainder of your earthly career, with that dear little nose of yours in the middle of your back, just because you had forgotten just where it belonged, wouldn't that be awful? How you take apart and still live, I do not know. They say the best of friends must part, Doris, but don't think that means you must dismember yourself on the slightest provocation. Keep yourself together, dear, as must dismember yourself on the slightest provocation. Keep yourself together, dear, as long as you can, for parting brings regrets as a rule. I have a friend who has owed me a dollar for ten years, I wish he'd part, but he won't. Doris, you have written a dandy letter, and in conclusion, give my love to Ann Apolis, and tell Mary Land I am glad she can live next to Della Ware without quarreling.

GUTHRIE CENTER, IA., April 22, 1907.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I have been a silent member of the League for about two years. I will now try to entertain you and all of the cousins for a few minutes.

When I first became a member of the League my home was a happy one. But it has been broken up so that there is only one sister and one brother and mother here now, with me, on the dear old Iowa farm. My father took one brother and one of my sisters, and went to Texas to live. They live on a section there. It is improved, so it is not so bad as it would have been were it unimproved.

I was seventeen last Feb. 22nd, quite an old maid. I like old maids, don't you, uncle and cousins? Say, Uncle, when you have any sewing or mending that has to be done, just send it to me, I am a swift little sewer. I made a waist in just about two hours this afternoon.

How many of the cousins like adventures? I do for one, and I also like to read the stories of adventure.

I am quite small for my age. I am five feet.

do for one, and I also like to read the stories of adventure.

I am quite small for my age. I am five feet two and one half inches high, weigh one hundred and twenty pounds, have light auburn hair, and blue eyes. My brothers and cousins tease me about being so small, but I tell them if I am small I can do a great deal of work any way. I can sew, mend, cook, bake, wash and scrub, also take care of the things out of doors, and work in the field when they need me there. There is one thing I like to do out of doors real well, and that is to milk cows, no matter what kind of weather it is. Well, my letter is long, so I will close. Good night, your niece, Marguellte Martin.

Margie I am ever so sorry your loved ones long, so I will close. Good night, your nice, Margie, I am ever so sorry your loved ones have begun to drift apart. It is hard to see brothers drifting here, sisters scattering there, and the old familiar faces no longer smiling upon us as of yore. Let us hope you will all get together on the old farm once more, and whatever happens, Marguerite, don't you drift apart, but hold together as long as you can, no matter what others do. Dear, I am glad you are a good sewer, I used to be, but I lost all heart for it some years ago. It happened thus. I started a tailoring business and made pant's making a specialty, and I hung out a big sign for operators, printed thus: "Fifty girls wanted to sew pant's buttons on the fourth floor!" Well, the next day, a howling mob of people were gathered in the street below, screaming with laughter. All New York seemed to have congregated under my office windows, and for the life of me I couldn't make out what all the excitement was about. Finally a police officer came and arrested me for disturbing the peace and causing a riot. It cost me $10 to get out of that scrape, and I did not know what I scrape, and I did not know what I had done until the judge said "Sir, pant's buttons are sewed on pants, and not on floors." That floored me. Next time I wanted help, I hung out a sign thus "Wanted a sewer," and when sign thus "Wanted a sewer," and when I got to my office in the morning, there were fifty men at the door with drainage pipes on their shoulders. their The men got sassy, and I turned the and the police came, and I was again arrested.

This cost me another "ten." Then I went home and looked in a dictionary, and lo, I discovered that sewer means not only one who sews, but a pipe that carries off water. And then I wept. Next time, before I went into then I wept. Next time, before I went into business, I took a course in a school that taught advertising. That schooling cost me $100. Then I went into the second-hand clothing business, and sat up all night writing a swell "ad" which was as follows: "Charles Noel Douglas having cast-off clothes of every de-scription, invites immediate inspection." That scription, invites immediate inspection." That "ad" brought a million people howling around the stere, and again the police nabbed me. and I got soaked another "ten." In vain, I tried to explain to the judge, that I hadn't cast off my own clothing, but was simply trying to sell the clothing other people had discarded. It was no use, the judge would not listen, and I get soaked another "ten." Then I put a sign in the window. "Every men women and shill. in the window: "Every man, woman and child in the city can have a fit in this store." In about two hours, five hundred people were having convulsions and throwing fits all over the store. The store was wrecked and I was the store. The store was wrecked and I was ruined. After that experience, I concluded I was unfit for business, and I went out of it forever. There's no use of talking, there was a first-class hoodoo around the day I was born. Here is a short letter from a suffering soul, CONOVER, OHIO, Mar. 17, 1907.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLIE:

I am an invalid, fory-three years old, and would like to have all the cousins give me a letter party. Be sure and put in a piece of writing-paper and a stamped envelope, so I can answer all who write. In all my life I have never been out of bed, making my living for the past few years by doing fancy work, for which I don't find much sale. I am very poorly now, and in pain all the time. Be sure and remember me June 22, 1907, my birthday. Good by, Your loving niece and cousin.

There was the rustling of a silken gown over

"Yes," said Gene as he followed her, "but can you honestly say you like it?"

"Of course! Why, I shall have absolutely nothing to &o, and can devote all my time to society—and you." She added the last two words as an after thought.

"But what about cooking arrangements?" said Gene, with that feeling of dismay creeping back upon him.

"That resolves itself into a simple matter. Meals can be sent up in the dumb-waiter and served in our private dining-room, or we can go to the restaurant for them, just as we please."

"Oh!" Contenting himself with the single exclamation, Gene said nothing further until they reached the last room, a bedroom in Louis Quinze style, and there the strong feeling of discontent which had been growing upon him,

"Do you know, Victoria," he said earnestly, "in all this magnificence I fail to find one room that has been designed and fitted up as a

It was four months later.

"Rosine," said Victoria to the little French maid, "you can lay out my opera cloak," then as the girl left the room, she added, in an angry tone, "and if Warfield keeps me waiting much longer he will get a warm reception when he comes. Before we were married," she went on bitterly, "he was quick enough to obey my slightest wish! now he opposes me in everything. I thought I could have wound him around my little finger, and instead I find him stubborn as any mule. In spite of all I can do or say he will take no advantage of his position to make money. And I need money—the bills I have run up terrify me. I have been kind and easy and palavering with him to no purpose. But what is keeping him—why doesn't he come? This waiting will drive me distracted."

that were being poured into his ears.

Rosine returned presently, bringing the cloak and bearing also a silver salver on which Victoria's face lost its look of vexation and a smile played around her lips as she read the name.

"Show him into the drawing-room, Rosine.

As for a moment Victoria's form stood outcaugh his breath hard at the sight of her beauty.

The two had met frequently during the winter. It was whispered in the inner circles of Washington society, that wherever the beautiful Mrs. Warfield went, whether to balls, receptions, dinners, or the opera, Cocoran was sure to be there, her very shadow.

As the man's huge bulk towered above her there was nothing of its unwonted pride in Victoria's eyes, but instead a something strangely submissive shone there as if she knew and acknowledged her superior.

When his large hand closed over her small one a strange feeling went through Victoria, and with this came the instinct to defend herself. With a swift movement she released her hand and motioning him to a chair seated herself on a low divan, and taking up a book of Dore's engravings, idly fluttered the leaves as they talked.

"It seems good—very good—to find you

"It seems good—very good—to find you alone," said he, in a low tone, "it is so seldom I can do that."

"No thanks to my husband," she said bitterly. "If I listened to him I should remain at home always alone. He would like to have me stay here—and sew." She nung out the last words in a burst of petulance.

With a sudden movement Corcoran drew have made a good detective," she returned lightly.

The conversation turned on different subjects, of famous people they both knew, of the theater, the latest scandal in official circles (when is there not a scandal in official circles?) and of the suicide of young Berkeley, a civil service attache who had killed himself because his sweetheart jilted hirn.

"I can conceive of a woman doing such a thing," said Victoria, "but a man—it seems almost incredible. It was Byron—and I don't know anyone who was better qualified to judge of the feminine character than he—who said:

of the feminine character than he-who said:

"'Man's love is of man's life a thing apart, 'Tis woman's whole existence.'"

"Byron only uttered a half truth," said Corcoran. "Why should love be a woman's whole existence any more than it is of a man? whole existence any more than it is of a man? Byron's whole life was a refutation of the first part of that statement, namely, that 'love is of man's life a thing apart.' Byron was never happy unless he was in love with some woman. The world has adjudged him fickle. I have never considered him so. Constancy breathes through every line he ever wrote. His love remained constant, the object alone changing. Do you know why? It was because he was continually searching for his ideal—the woman of his dreams. Through all the intrigues of of his dreams. Through all the intrigues of the court of George the Third and his later life on the continent he sought her—his dream life on the continent he sought her—his dream woman—and he went to his grave with his quest unfinished. Will you smile if I compare myself to Byron? Our cases are parallel. I believe that to know life one must live it. I have lived it—at least I have not stagnated. I have taken life up in both hands and eaten of it. I have trodden the full length of the road. I have been in love, even as Byron was, a countless number of times. Through all the years of my manhood I have been searching for the woman of my dreams. True, I married. And look what my married life has brought me! I go into the presence of that Victoria's manner did not invite further discussion of the subject and Gene wisely concluded to let the matter drop. Nevertheless, when he received the lease a few days later, he breathed a sigh of satisfaction.

"I'm glad that's settled," he said to himself.

"I have paid the rent in advance during my official term, and they can't turn us outdoors now—no matter what happens."

It was four months later.

"Rosine," said Victoria to the little French maid, "you can lay out my opera cloak," then as the girl left the room, she added, in an angry tone, "and if Warfield keeps me waiting much longer he will get a warm reception when he comes. Through the whole world I searched for my ideal—and I have found her alas! too for my ideal—and I have found her alas! too

The last words were a sigh of passion and Corcoran's eyes were like living coals as he bent them upon Victoria's flushed and downcast face.

"Too late!" The echo came from Victoria, yet her appearance at the moment contradicted the words. Her soft breath scarcely pulsated the lace on her bosom, her eyes were filled with a misty light. She was a living, breathing impersonation of incarnate love.

"Is it too late?" Corcoran bent nearer, his eyes aflame.

Suddenly all the womanhood within Victoria

Suddenly all the womanhood within Victoria arose up and asserted itself as she stretched out her hands pleadingly.

"Don't play with me, Michael,"—the word slipped out unconsciously, and the man's wild heart leaped at the sound—"don't play with me. It is like playing with fire, and you know what that is when it gets beyond control."

"I would not let it get beyond control," he replied softly. "I would have it burn for me alone. I would bathe my soul in its radiant warmth." He bent lower his lips trembling in their eagerness to drink her kiss.

There was the sound of approaching foot-

"Take care! Warfield is entering." Corcoran bent over and took the book of engravings from her lap.

"Yes, Mrs. Warfield," he said, in slightly raised tones, "I agree with you. This engraving is the best specimen of Dore's art I have seen."

"He has some nefarious scheme on foot," thought Gene, "and he has come here to ask me to aid him in it. I am in the grip of the machine and must obey. Shall I ever, I wonder, be a free man again?" Aloud, offering his hand to Corcoran:

"I was not expecting to find you here."

CHAPTER IX.

THE UNWELCOME STRANGER.

The months that followed were trying ones, re through them all Gene's patience was un-bounded, and it would have been hard to recognize in the quiet man so lovingly con-siderate of the capricious woman who flouted and insulted him, the once impetuous Warfield. and insulted him, the once impetuous Warfield. In the last few years the price of lumber has more than doubled in cost. Before the increase the price was higher than the average farmer could pay. The use of shingles, therefore, has been growing less and less, and the progressive farmer has been using Amatite instead.

What is Amatite? It is the mineral surfaced roofing that costs less and wears longer than the "Paint-me-every-two-years-or-leak" kind.

It's waterproof, weatherproof, stormproof. It's the one with a real mineral surface that makes painting and coating entirely unnecessary. Any one can lay it by simply following the directions which go with every roll. We send along free enough nails and cement for laps.

Edna Earl witnesses a duel, and Harry Dent falls dead. The body is carried to the home of Aaron Hunt, Edna's grandfather. Edna goes to her grandfather's blacksmith shop, where he is shoeing a vicious horse. The owner, impatient at the delay, curses her grandfather. Aaron Hunt dies suddenly, and for weeks Edna retains a vague remembrance of keen anguish. She decides to go to Columbus, Georgia, to work in the factory, and boards the train at Chattanooga. Night comes on and she is awakened by a succession of shrill sounds and all is chaos. Edna, severely injured, is carried to the home of Mrs. Murray, who will educate her, exacting certain things. St. Elmo, Mrs. Murray's son, comes home. Edna overhears his words of disapproval, and in his voice, recognizes the man who cursed her grandfather. She falls saleep in the garden. St. Elmo discovers a dangerous dog near her, and thunders for her to keep still. He selzes the dog and commands the girl to bring him astick. She pleads for the dog and snatching the stick from his hand refuses to give it back. St. Elmo is dumb with astonishment. He walks up and down his elegant rooms. On a slab is a miniature tomb, the richly carved door of which is opened only by a key, which never leaves St. Elmo's watch-chaip.

Mrs. Murray secures Mr. Hammond as Edna's instructor and she begins the study of Latin and Greek. St. Elmo starts on a long journey. He intrusts the key to Edna's keeping on two conditions; first not to mention it to anyone, and that she will not open the tomb, unless he fails to return at the end of four years and she has good reason to consider him dead. She promises not to betray the trust. Gordon Leigh studies with Edna, and together they begin Hebrew. Edna receives an invitation to a party given by Mrs. Inge, Gordon Leigh's sister. She goes to the party and overhears criticisms concerning the scheme to make a marriage between her and Gordon Leigh.

Edna goes to the library. She is conscious of some unseen presence. She walks up to the tomb, and takes the key from its hiding-place. Unless she has reason to believe he is dead she is not to open it. Again she is positive of some powerful influence, and looking up sees Mr. Murray. He is ready to receive an account of her stewardship. He doubts her; if she has kept her promise there will be a report. He had thought his confidence killed. She stands firm. Edna is seized with authorship and submits her work. Mrs. Murray announces the coming of her niece, Estelle Harding. St. Elmo objects. Edna receives her rejected manuscript from Douglass G. Manning.

O; your common sense ought to teach you that such was not my meaning or intention. Edna places no such interpretation on my words."
"Common sense! Oh, Gordon, dearie! how unreasonable you are! Why, you have told me a thousand times that I had not a particle of common sense, except on the subject of juleps; and how, then, in the name of wonder, can you expect me to show any? I never pretended to be a great shining genius like Edna, whose writings all the world is talking about. I only want to be wise enough to understand you, dearie, and make you happy. Gordon, don't you feel any better? What makes your face so red?"
She went back to his chair, and leaned her lovely head close to his, while an anxious expression filled her large blue eyes.
Gordon Leigh realized that his marriage was terrible mistake, which only death could rectifv; but even in his wretchedness he was just, blaming only himself—exonerating his wife. Had he not woosed the love of which, already, he was weary? Having deceived her at the altar, was there justification for his dropping the mask at the hearthstone? Nay, the skeleton must be no rattling of skull and crossbones to freeze the blood in the sweet laughing face of the trusting bird.

Now her clinging tenderness, her affectionate untilly upbraided him as no harsh words ald possibly have done. With a smothered spent in reading to him. But her old associates in the choir insisted that, before she returned to New York, she should sing with them once more.

Thus far she had declined all invitations; but on the morning of the last day of her visit, the organist called to say that a distinguished divine, from a distant State, would fill Mr. Hammond's pulpit; and as the best and leading soprano in the choir was disabled by a severe cold, and could not be present, he begged that Edna would take her place, and sing a certain solo in the music which he had selected for an opening piece. Mr. Hammond, who was pardonably proud of his choir, was anxious that the stranger should be greeted and inspired by the fine music, and urged Edna's compliance with the request.

Reluctantly she consented, and for the first time Duty and Love seemed to signal a truce, to shake hands over the preliminaries of a treaty for peace.

As she passed through the churchyard and walked up the steps, where a group of Sabbathschool children sat talking, her eyes involuntarily sought the dull brown spot on the marble. Over it little Herbert Inge had spread his white handkerchief, and piled thereon his Testament and catechism, laying on the last one of those gilt-bordered and handsome pictorial cards, containing a verse from the Scriptures, which are frequently distributed by Sabbathschool teachers.

Edna stooped and looked at the picture covering the blood-stain. It represented our Saviour on the Mount, delivering the sermon, and in golden letters were printed his words:

"Judge not, that ye be not judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again."

She trembled, and hastily kissing the sweet red lips which little Herbert held up to her, she went in, and up to the gallery.

The congregation assembled slowly, and as almost all the faces were familiar to Edna, each arrival revived something of the past.

When Mr. Leigh and Gertrude entered there was a general stir, a lifting of heads and twisting of necks, in order to ascertain what n pew. The strains of triumph ceased, the organ only sobbed its sympathy to the thorn-crowned Christ, struggling along the Via Dolorosa, and the orphan's quivering lips parted, and she sang her solo.

the orphan's quivering lips parted, and she sang her solo.

As her magnificent voice rose and rolled to the arched roof, people forgot propriety, and turned to look at the singer. She saw Mrs. Murray start and glance eagerly up at her, and for an instant the grand, pure voice faltered slightly, as Edna noticed that the mo.her whis pered something to the son. But he did not turn his proud head, he only leaned his elbow on the side of the pew next to the aisle, and rested his temple on his hand.

When the preliminary services ended, and the minister commenced his discourse, Edna felt that St. Elmo had at last enlisted ange in his behalf; for the stext was contained in the warning, whose glided letters hid the blood-spet, "Judge not, that ye be not judged."

As far as two among his auditory were concerned, the preacher might as well addressed his sermon to the mossy slabs, visible through the windows. Both listened to the text, and neither heard any more. Edna sat looking down at Mr. Murray's massive, finely-poised head, and she could see the profile contour of features, regular and dark, as if carved and bronzed.

During the next half-hour her vivid imagination sketched and painted a vision of enchantbronzed.

During the next half-hour her vivid imagination sketched and painted a vision of enchantment—of what might have been, if that motionless man below, there in the crimson-cushioned pew, had only kept his soul from grievous sins. A vision of a happy, proud, young wife reigning at Le Bocage, shedding the warm, rosy light of her love over the lonely life of its master; adding to his strong, clear, intellect and rine experience the silver flame of her sonlys. ter; adding to his strong, clear, intellect and ripe experience, the silver flame of her genius; borrowing from him broader and more profound views of her race, on which to base her ideal seathetic structures; softening, refining his nature, strengthening her own; helping him to help humanity; loving all good, being good, doing good; serving and worshiping God together; walking hand and hand with her husband through earth's wide valley of Baca, with peaceful faces full of faith, looking heavenward.

"God pity them both! and pity us all,
Who vainly the dreams of youth recall.
For of all sad words of tongue or pen
The saddest are these, 'It might have been!'"

The saddest are these, 'It might have been!'"

At last, with a faint moan, which reached no ear but that of Him who never slumbers, Edna withdrew her eyes from the spot where Mr. Murray sat, and raised them toward the pale Christ, whose wan lips seemed to murmur: "Be of good cheer! He that overcometh shall inherit all things. What I do, thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter."

The minister, standing beneath the picture of the Master whom he served, closed the Bible and ended his discourse by hurling his text as a thunderbolt at those whose upturned faces watched him:

"Finally, brethren, remember under all circumstances the awful admonition of Jesus, 'Judge not, that ye be not judged!"

The organ peals and the doxology were concluded; the benediction fell like God's dew, alike on sinner and on saint, and amid the solemn moaning of the gilded pipes, the congregation turned to quit the church.

With both hands pressed over her heart, Edna leaned heavily against the railing.

"Tomorrow I go away forever. I shall never."

sigh he passed his arm around her, and drew her closer to his side.

"At least my little wife is wise enough to teach her husband to be ashamed of his petulance."

"And quite wise enough, dear Gertrude, to make him very proud and happy; for you ought to be able to say with the sweetest singer in all merry England:

"But I look up, and he looks down, And thus our married eyes can meet, Unclouded his, and clear of frown, And gravely sweet."

As Edna glanced at the young wife wittered these words, a mist gathered in her own eyes, and collecting her sewing utensils she went to her room to pack her trunk.

I'uring her stay at the parsonage she had not attended service in the church, because Mr. Hammond was lonely, and her Sabbaths were spent in reading to him. But her old associates in the choir insisted that, before she returned to New York, she should sing with them once more.

Thus far she had declined all invitations; but on the morning of the last day of her visit, the organist called to say that a distinguished divine, from a distant State, would fill Mr. Hammond's pulpit; and as the best and lead-

CHAPTER XXXIV.

"GOD NEVER INTENDED US FOR EACH OTHER."

"I am truly thankful that you have returned! I am quite worn out trying to humor Felix's whims, and take your place. He has actually lost ten pounds; and if you had staid away a month longer I think it would have finished my poor boy, who has set you up as an idol in his heart. I am very anxious about him; his health is more feeble than it has been since he was five years old. My dear, you have no idea how you have been missed! Your admirers call by scores to ascertain when you may be expected home; and I do not exaggerate in the least when I say that there is a champagne basketful of periodicals and letters upstairs, that have arrived recently. You will find them piled on the table and desk in your room."

"Where are the children?" asked Edna, glancing around the sitting-room into which Mrs. Andrews had drawn her.

"If attle is spending the day with Lila Manning, who is just recovering from a severe attack of scarlet fever, and Felix is in the library trying to sleep. He has one of his nervous headaches today. Poor fellow! he tries so hard to overcome his irritable temper and to grow patient, that I am growing fonder of him every day. How ghastly you are! Sit down, and I will order some refreshments. Take this wine, my dear, and presently you shall have a cup of chocolate."

"Thank you, not any wine. I only want to see Felix."

She went to the library, cautiously opened the door, and crept softly across the floor to the end of the sofa.

The boy lay looking through the window, and up beyond the walls and chimneys, at the sapphire pavement, where rolled the sun. Casual observers thought the cripple's face ugly and disagreeable; but the tender, loving smile that lighted the countenance of the governess as she leaned forward, told that some charm lingered in the sharpened features overcast with sickly sallowness. In his large, deep-set eyes, over which the heavy brows arched like a roof, she saw now a strange expression that frightened her.

sallowness. In his large, deep-set eyes, over which the heavy brows arched like a roof, she saw now a strange expression that frightened her.

The governess was seized by a vague apprehension as she watched her pupil, and bending down, she said, fondly:

"Felix, my darling, I have come back! Never again while I live will I leave you."

The almost bewildering joy that fiashed into his countenance mutely but eloquently welcomed her, as kneeling beside the sofa she wound her arms around him, and drew his head to her shoulder.

"Edna, is Mr. Hammond dead?"

"No, he is almost well again, and needs me no more."

"I need you more than anybody else ever did. Oh, Edna! I thought sometimes you would stay at the South that you loved so well, and I should see you no more; and then all the light seemed to die out of the world, and the flowers were not sweet, and the stars were not bright, and oh! I was glad I had not long to live."

"Hush! you must not talk so. My dear little boy, in all this wide earth, you are the only one whom I have to love and cling to, and we will be happy together. Darling, your head aches today?"

She pressed her lips twice to his hot forehead. "Yes; but the heartache was much the hardest to bear until you came. Mamma has been very good and kind, and staid at home and read to me; but I wanted you, Edna. I do not believe I have been wicked since you left; for I prayed all the while that God would bring you back to me. I have tried hard to be patient."

With her cheek nestled against his, Edna told him many things that had occurred during their separation, and noticed that his eyes brightened suddenly and strangely.

"Edna, I have a secret to tell you; something that even mamma is not to know just now. You must not laugh at me. While you were gone I him many things that had occurred during their separation, and noticed that his eyes brightened suddenly and strangely.

"Edna, I have a secret to tell you; something that even mamma is not to know just now. You must not laugh at me. While you were gone I wrote a little MS., and it is dedicated to you! and some day I hope it will be printed. Are you glad, Edna? My beautiful, pale Edna!"

"Fellx, I am very glad you love me sufficiently to dedicate your little MS. to me; but, my dear boy, I must see it before I can say I am glad you wrote it."

"If you had been here, it would not have been written, because then I should merely have talked out all the ideas to you; but you were far away, and so I talked to my paper. After all, it was only a dream. One night I was feverish, and mamma read aloud those passages that you marked in that great book, Maury's Physical Geography of the Sea, that you admire and quote so often; and of which I remember you said once, in talking to Mr. Manning, that it rolled its warm, beautiful, sparkling waves of thought across the cold, gray sea of science, just like the Gulf Stream it treated of." Two of the descriptions which mamma read were so splendid that they rang in my ears like the music of the Swiss Bei-Ringers.

"Edna, I should like above all things to write a book of stories for poor, sick children; little tales that would make them forget their suffering and deformity. If I could even reconcile one lame boy to being shut up indoors, while others are shouting and skating in the sunshine, I should not feel as if I were so altogether useless in the world. Edna, do you think that I shall ever be able to do so?"

"Perhaps so, dear Felix; certainly, if God wills it. When you are stronger we will study and write together, but today you must compose yourself and be silent. Your fever is rising."

"The dector less some medicine youder in that goblet, but mamma has forgotten to give it to me. I will take a spoonful now, if you please."

His face was much flushed; and as she kissed him and turned away, he exclaimed:
"Oh! where are you going?"

'Po my room, to take off my hat."
"Do not be gone long. I am so happy now that you are here again. But I don't want you to get out of my sight. Come back soon, and bathe my head."

On the following day, when Mr. Manning called to welcome her home, he displayed an earnestness and depth of feeling which surprised the governess. Putting his hand on her arm, he said in a tone that had lost its metallic ring.

the trial; and if I had a right to Interfere, you should never have gone."

"Mr. Manning, I do not quite understand your meaning."

"Edna, to see you dying by inches is bitter indeed! I believed that you would marry Murray—at least I knew any other woman would—and I reit that to refuse his affection would be a terrible trial, through which you could not pass with impunity. Why you rejected him I have no right to inquire, but I have a right to ask you to let me save your life. I am well aware that you do not love me, but at least you can esteem and entirely trust me; and once more I hold out my hand to you and say, give me the wreck of your life! oh! give me the ruins of your heart! I will guard you tenderly; we will go to Europe—to the East; and rest of mind, and easy traveling, and change of scene wil restore you. I never realized, never dreamed how much my happiness depended upon you, until you left the city. I have always relied so entirely upon myself, feeling the need of no other human being; but now, separated from you I am restless, am conscious of a vague discontent. If you spend the next year as you have spent the last, you will not survive it. I have conferred with your physician. He reluctantly told me your alarming condition, and I have come to plead with you for the last time not to continue your suicidal course, not to dstroy the life which, if worthless to you, is inexpressibly precious to a man who prays to be allowed to take care of it. A man who realizes that it is necessary to the usefulness and peace of his own lonely life; who wishes no other reward on earth but the privilege of looking into your approving eyes, when his daily work is ended, and he sits down at his fireside. Edna, I do not ask for your love, but I beg for your hand, your confidence, your society—for the right to save you from toil. Will you go to the Old World with me?"

Looking suddenly up at him, she was astonished to find tears in his searching and usually cold eyes.

ished to find tears in his searching and usually cold eyes.
So, in the frozen, crystal depths of this man's nature, his long silent, smothered affections began to chime.
A proud smile trembled over Edna's face, as she saw how entirely she possessed the heart of one, whom above all other men she most admired.

"Mr. Manning, the assertion that you regard and life and interpretate in remulate with the state of the same life and the same life a she saw how entirely she possessed the heart of one, whom above all other men she most admired.

"Mr. Manning, the assertion that you regard your life as imperfect, incomplete, without the feeble complement of mine—that you find your greatest happiness in my society, is the most flattering, the most gratifying tribute which ever has been, or ever can be paid to my intellect. It is a triumph indeed; and, because unsought, surely it is a pardonable pride that makes my heart throb. This assurance of your high regard is the brightest earthly crown I shall ever wear. You think now that if we were only married, my constant presence in your home, my implicit confidence in your character, would fully content you; but here you fail to understand your own heart, and I know that the consciousness that my affection was not yours would make you wretched. No, no! my dear, noble friend! God never intended us for each other. I cannot go to the Old World with you. I know how peculiarly precarious is my tenure of life, and how apparently limited is my time for work in this world, but I am content. I try to labor faithfully, listening for the summons of Him who notices eyen the death of sparrows. God will not call me hence, so long as He has any work for me to do on earth: and when I become useless, and can no longer serve Him here, I do not wish to live. Through Christ I am told, 'Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid,' Mr. Manning, I am not ignorant of, nor indifferent to, my physical condition: but, thank God! I can say truly, I am not troubled, neither am I afraid, and my faith is—

'All as God wills, who wisely heeds,

To give or to withhold,

'All as God wills, who wisely heeds,
To give or to withhold,
And knoweth more of all my needs
Than all my prayers have told.'"

And knoweth more of all my needs
Than all my prayers have told."

The editor took off his glasses and wiped them, but the dimness was in his eyes; and after a minute, during which he recovered his olu calmness, he said gravely and quietly:
"Edna, one favor, at least, you will grant me. The death of a relative in Louisiana has placed me in possession of ample fortune, and I wish you to take my little Lila and travel for several years. You are the only woman I ever knew to whom I would entrust her and her education, and it would graffy me beyond expression to feel that I had afforded you the pleasure which cannot fail to result from such a tour. Do not be too proud to accept a little happiness from my hands."
"Thank you, my generous, noble friend! I gratefully accept a great deal of happiness at this instant, but your kind offer I must decline. I cannot leave Felix."
It call towords hat, and his eyes ran over the face and figure of the governess.
"As you will not grant my petition, try to forget it: we will bury the subject. Good by! I sha." call tomorrow afternoon to take you to drive."

With renewed zest Edna devoted every moment stolen from Felix, to the completion of her new book. Her first had been a "bounteous promise"—at least so said criticdom—and she felt that the county would determine her literary position, the second would determine her literary position, would either place her reputation as an author beyond all cavil, or utterly crush her ambition. Sometimes as she bent over her MS.. and paused to reread some passage just penned, which she had laboriously composed, a smile would fit across her countenance while she which she had laboriously composed, a smile would fit across her countenance while she asked herself:

"Will my readers see it as I see it? Will they thank me for my high opinion of their culture, in assuming that it will be quite as plain to them as to me? If there should accidentally be an allusion to classical or scientific literature, which they do not understand at the first hasty, careless, novel-reading glance, will they inform themselves, and then appreciate my reason for employing it, and thank me for the hint; or will they attempt to ridicule my pedantry? When will they begin to suspect that what they may imagine sounds 'learned' in my writings, merely appears so to them because they have not climbed high enough to see how vast, how infinite is the sphere of human learning?"

Edna unintentionally and continually judged her readers according to her own standard, and so eager, so unquenchable was her thirst for knowledge, that she could not understand how the utterance of some new fact, or the redressing and presentation of some forgotten idea, could possibly be regarded as an insult by the person thus benefited. Of one intensely gratifying fact she could not fall to be thoroughly informed, by the avalanche of letters which almost daily covered her desk; she had at least ensconced herself securely in a citadel, whence she could smilingly defy all assaults—in the warm hearts of her noble countrywomen.

So with many misgivings, and much hope, and asked herself: "Will my r

The second clutch of eggs she should be allowed to retain, for goslings hatched under the oily moisture of a goose's breast are stronger, and so desirable for future stock. It is the want of this humid warmth, when ordinary hens are used to incubate such large eggs, that necessitates sprinkling the eggs two or three times, and, when possible, making the nest on the ground, or at least cutting a sod, and placing it at the bottom of any wooden box used as a nest. The eggs take from twenty-eight to thirty days to incubate. Goslings require virtually the same feed and general care as young ducks, the only difference being an increase of grass and vegetables; so we will combine young ducks and goslings. When ducks' eggs are hatched under hens, they need only be allowed to brood them for three weeks, unless the weather is very cold, in which case, leave their mother for another week. old, to insure strength and growth.

Young ducks and goslings must starve for the first twenty-four hours of their existence. Bill of fare for the first week is as follows: Half a pint of pinhead oatmeal, cracked wheat or stale bread crumbs, two hard-boiled eggs chopped fine, half a cup of coarse sand, all mixed and just moistened with scalding milk. eed five times a day, as much as they eat in ten minutes.

Four to six weeks: Boil a quart of hulled oats for an hour, add one pint of corn meal, wheat bran, half a pint of fine grit, the same of beef scraps, one quart of clover or any green food. Feed four times a day.

Six to ten weeks: One quart of corn meal, one pint wheat bran, a pint of boiled oats, pint of beef scraps, half of grit, tablespoonful of charcoal, pint of clover. Feed three times a day. Then they should be ready to kill.

Those to be kept for stock have the same ration until three weeks old; then they are given equal parts of ground feed and bran, moistened with milk or water. Feed twice a day, if on free range. If yarded, add half a cup of beef scraps, cut clover, or vegetables to double the quantity of grain.

Young ducks are very nervous, and will not forget a scare for weeks. You can persuade them to go in any direction, if you work slowly and quietly. Hurry excites them, and they will rush shrieking in every direction, except the one you would have them go.

Turkeys and Guinea Fowls

A few barrels, secreted in out of the way corners, at the back of the farm buildings, will frequently attract turkeys, and prevent will frequently attract turkeys, and prevent their wandering off into the woods, or brush lots, to lay. It is advisable to steal the first eggs, and set them under a comfortable old Biddy, who will be content to remain peace-fully near home with her foster babies, in-stead of wandering all over the country with them, as does the average turkey and guinea mother.

Feed for the Turkey

Give nothing for the first twenty-four hours; then the daily bill of fare should be as follows: First feed 7 A. M.—Crushed hempseed, half a cup; stale bread crumbs, half a Second feed, 9 A. M.—Millet seed.

Third feed, 11.30 A. M.—Chopped onion tops, half a cup of corn meal that has been steamed as for chicks, half a teaspoonful of crushed mustard seed, mixed and fed crumblingly.

These bill of fares can be varied with pot cheese, custard, chopped lettuce or apple, bread crumbs moistened with milk, hard-boiled eggs; but every day they must have meat (more than chicks need), and pepper or mustard seed crushed, and fed in soft food. A.—Your turkeys must be in a very bad condition; I fear almost hopeless. However, try what a small dose, say five drops of Jamaica ginger night and morning will do, for a few days. The easiest way to administer it is to moisten, a few bread crumbs with it, just sufficiently to roll into a pill. Feed them on well-steamed corn meal, bran and clover hay, chopped garlic added. Remove and burn all droppings under night roosts, and at once confine all affected birds in a small house, which can be cleaned thoroughly every day. Most turkey diseases are infectious, so be careful not to expose any of your other poultry to danger. Your description is so meager, that it is difficult to feel sure just what the trouble is, or what may have caused it. If your feed has been low, increase it; if, on the other hand, it has consisted of lots of whole corn, stop it at once. If, as I gather from your letter, the whole flock is affected, use a gill of Douglass mixture to every two quarts of water, twice a week for a few weeks. A table-spoonful should be added to each pint of water twice a week for a few weeks. A table-spoonful should be added to each pint of water twice a week for a few weeks. A table-spoonful should be added to each pint of water every day, for the really sick birds. The Douglass mixture is made by dissolving four ounces of sulphate of iron in two quarts of water. After the iron has dissolved, add one quarter of a fluid ounce of sulphuric acid; when clear it is ready for use.

water. After the iron has dissolved, add one quarter of a fluid ounce of sulphuric acid; when clear it is ready for use.

A. J. D.—My little chicks have gapes again. I lose so many with gapes. Can you tell me what to do for them?

A.—Gapes is caused by a small worm which frequents the breeding place of poultry and birds. It is about five-sixteenths of an inch long, and about as thick as a fine sewing needle, and from all the information that can be gathered about it, it seems certain that, after entering the windpipe of a chick, it produces young, as bunches of little ones, not more than three-sixteenths of an inch long, have been found on making a post mortem examination, but only when an old and mature one was also present. In color they vary from pale gray, almost white, to dark red, according to the amount of blood they have taken. As it is only little chicks that are the victims, the older birds are probably able to eject these worms, or the windpipe of adults may be too hard for the parasites to fasten on. If you had any cases of gapes last year, find some new spot to place the coops, so that the little ones have fresh ground to run on. If that is not possible, sprinkle lime, and plough or dig under. The danger spots seems to be trodden-down, bare earth.

The trouble being in the windpipe of the bird makes it very difficult to treat. Every poultry supply store has for sale some worm extractor, twisted wire or horsehair arrangements. The home-made one is simple, and quite as good. Take a wing feather, and strip it of all except the extreme end; dip this in turpentine, push it down the bird's throat, give it a twirl, and draw it out quickly. If they are present, you will bring some worms with it. Another remedy which has been recommended as safe and sure, is to mix a teaspoonful of salt and water, pour it down the afflicted bird's throat, and quickly turn its head down. The chick will gasp, sputter, and eject the intruders.

DEAR COMFORT SISTERS: DEAR COMPORT SISTERS:
I live in sunny Kansas, right in the oil and gas belt, and I have all the gas I want, it is just fine. I wish all the sisters could have it. Did any of you ever see a burning gas well? It is a grand sight to see the flames leaping a hundred or more feet in the air. I live all alone on a little farm. My children are all warried or a save from head. see the flames leaping a hundred or more feet in the air. I live all alone on a little farm. My children are all married or are away from home, you may ask me if I ever get lonely. No, I do not very often for I am one that believes in being cheerful and looking on the bright side, for there is always a bright side if we will only look for it, I just drive the blues away and will not let them come around me. I do fancy work, visit my neighbors, visit the sick, and help others bear their burdens. There are so many to encourage and help carry their load of care that one never need to sit down and complain. You may think I have never had any trouble myself, but if you do you will be mistaken, for I have had my share, but God is good and will bear all our burdens if we will let Him. I do feel sorry for all the shut-ins, and wish I could talk personally with each one.

Get three fresh vanilla beans of a druggist, break in small pieces and put them into half a pint of alcohol. It will be fit for use in a few days.

To make lemon extract grate the rind of three lemons with half a pint of alcohol. In four days pour into a bottle and add one ounce of oil of lemon. This makes a strong flavor at less than half price. Orange extract may be prepared in the same way.

Currant Pie

Put on the stove to boil one and one half pounds of currants, with enough water to cover well, let boil till water has all boiled off; fill your pie tins with the currants, add one cup of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of butter, three tablespoonfuls of apple jelly, sprinkle with cianamon, bake with two crusts; this makes two pies. Mrs. Wm. Willdung.

A Toothsome Pie

To enough stewed pieplant, or rhubarb, for one pie add the yolks of two eggs and one cup of sugar. Bake with one crust and beat the whites, add one tablespoonful of sugar, spread over the top and brown the same as for lemon pie.

When baking never use soft butter or lard for piecrust, butter should be washed in cold water before used in this way. For all loaf cakes, eggs, butter, etc., should be kept in a cold place until ready for use. Fruit to be added to loaf cake should first be rubbed well with flour, this will prevent it from settling to the bottom. When your stove burns the bread on top, put some cold water in the top part of the oven, this will prevent bread or pastry from burning.

Beef Tea

Take one pound of beef (weighed without fat, bone or skin), one pint of water. Mince the beef and place it in a jar with the water. Stand the jar, covered closely, in the oven, which must not be too hot, or into a pot of cold water, which should be gradually brought to a simmer round the jar, from two to four hours. The beef tea must never boi. An egg, or milk, or strong gruel added to beef tea makes it nourishing, as the plain beef tea is only a stimulant.

Whites of six eggs beaten stiff, three quarters of a cup of granulated sugar (sifted twice). Stir into eggs very slowly, adding a small quantity at a time, then one half cup of flour with half a teaspoonful of cream of tartar mixed with hit and sifted six times with the flour, add a little at a time to the sugar and eggs, pinch of salt, a few drops of flavoring (some do not care for any). Bake in an unbuttered tin, when done turn the pan bottom up and leave the cake to fall out itself. Put a pint dish of hot water in the oven while baking, as the cake scorches very easily.

Canned Rhubarb

Peel the fruit, cut up in small pleces, fill jars, shaking down well, fill to the brim with ice cold water, seal at once, and place on cellar bottom in dark corner.

Daisy Wine

To one quart of daisy blossoms add one quart of boiling water, let stand forty-eight hours, then press and strain; to each quart of liquid allow one third of a pound of sugar. Let stand in keg until cold weather, keep filling jug as it works from a keg or jug of the same liquid that must be kept for that purpose, with the same amount of sugar in it, as that in the keg. When stopped working, bung up tightly. In the spring pour off carefully without shaking keg, and bottle.

Dandetion Wine

Dandetion Wine

One gallon dandelion blossoms picked when the sun is shining, pour over them one gallon of boiling water, let stand in cool place for three days, put into porcelain-lined kettle, with the rind of three oranges and one lemon cut fine, boil fifteen minutes, then stir. Add three pounds of sugar (white), and the pulp of three oranges and lemons; when lukewarm add half of a Fleischman's yeast cake, stand in a warm place for a week, strain again, and let stand until it stops working, then bottle. This is fine for anyone suffering from tuberculosis.

Jerry, the Backwoods Boy

"You smeared it with blood from the musket wound," said Clarke suspiciously.

"John shot it—here," said the Indian, pointing out the place where his arrow had struck and penetrated the deer.

"Zounds!" said the lawyer, chop-fallen. "I don't know but you did have a share in it—but don't you see that wound would never have killed the deer? You would have lost it after all, if my musket ball hadn't come in to finish the work."

John, who understood the drift of the remark evidently did not assent to the lawyer's view, but still insisted that the deer was his own.

Dick Clarke had no especial use for the deer. It had no value to him beyond furnishing an evidence of his success as a sportsman. It was only natural for him to be, proud of his first game, and he had imagined for himself quite a triumph in carrying it into the village. But John's claim interfered fatally with his intention. Though he might plume himself on killing the deer, there was no especial glory in being its joint slayer, especially when, as John contended, it had already been brought to the ground when he fired at it. To urge a claim under such circumstances, if known, would only subject him to ridicule, as he could very well imagine. In this state of things it occurred to him to effect a compromise with the Indian, which he thought he might readily do by the judicious use of a little money.

he thought he might readily do by the judicious use of a little money.

So he broached the subject by saying, "Come, John, you don't want this deer."

The Indian asserted doggedly that it was rightfully his, and that he would have it.

"But," urged the wily lawyer, "if you will let me have it, and I admit that it is yours, I will give you some silver which will be worth let me have it, and I admit that it is yours, I will give you some silver which will be worth a great deal more to you than the deer."

This was an argument the Indian understood. He had already learned the great value of money by his intercourse with the whites. He knew that his favorite drink could be obtained on more favorable terms for this than in the way of barter, and as this was the intended destination of the deer had was the intended destination of the deer, he might as well accept the white man's proffer.

"How much?" he asked sententiously.

The lawyer brought forth his wallet, and opening it, drew out a silver dollar.

This he held up in his hand, and turning to John, said: "You shall have this if you will let me have the deer and say nothing of having shot it. Do you agree?" But the lawyer had, in his eagerness, committed an error from which the caution taught him in his profession ought to have saved

In opening his pocketbook he incautiously displayed a part of the contents. These included a number of gold pieces that were plainly revealed to the Indian.

plainly revealed to the Indian.

Now John was so far versed in the usages of the whites as to be aware of the greatly superior value of gold to silver. Here was a strong temptation for him. He knew that the gold he saw would buy him many gallons of rum. It might keep him supplied for months. Besides this, it would buy him a lodging or a dinner whenever he chose. It need hardly be said that he was little bound by moral considerations touching the abstract rectifude or was rapidly making up his mind what to do. By a sudden, and on the lawyer's part wholly unforeseen movement, he snatched the pocketbook from his grasp, pinioned Clarke's arms with one of his own, and drawing forth a strong cord, preceeded to tie him hand and foot.

Of course this was not effected without resistance. But the lawyer was no match in strength for the athletic young Indian. Besides he was taken suddenly, and at a disadvantage. There was one weapon of offense which he freely used, however, and that was his tongue. He berated the Indian in the most forcible terms which his vocabulary could supply him, and among these were some which it may be advisable not to transfer to these it may be advisable not to transfer to thes pages.

But for words the Indian cared not. He proceeded swiftly and dextrously in his task, and in the space of a minute the lawyer was lying bound hand and foot side by side with the quarry which he coveted.

Having possessed himself of the pocketbook, John paid no regard to the deer, but went on his way, leaving the lawyer filled with went on his way, leaving the lawyer filled with rage and vexation.

"What a confounded fool I was to show him the pocketbook!" he muttered, vexed with his own imprudence. "I deserve all this. There were over a hundred dollars in that pocketbook, and, good Heavens!"—the lawyer started in affright as this new misfortune flashed upon him—"good Heavens! only this morning I put into it that fatal letter. If by chance it should fall into the hands of the Parkhursts or young Davenport, my fortune is lost beyond redemption! I could shoot that Indian with a good relish. If I could only free myself from these cords!"

The lawyer little suspected to what angel of consolation he was to be indebted for his of consolation he was to be indebted for his release from bonds.

In snatching the lawyer's pocketbook, Indian John had acted from a sudden impulse. He understood that this daring outrage would compel him to leave the neighborhood, but for this he cared little. In fact, that was a step on which he had already determined and which would require no sacrifice on his part. It would be disagreeable after his formal expulsion to meet the members of his own tribe, as he must do if he continued to roam these woods.

When he had placed a half-mile between himself and his victim, who lay writhing in his bonds, he proceeded to open the pocket-book, and with some curiosity began to examine the contents.

These consisted of the gold already mentioned, a small sum in silver, and various great patience, she worked on assiduously, and early in summer her book was finished and placed in the publisher's hands.

In the midst of her anxiety concerning its reception, a new and terrible apprehension took possession of her, for it became painfully evident that Fellx, whose health had never been good, was slowly but steadily declining.

Mrs. Andrews and Edna took him to Sharon, to Saratoga, and to various resorts for invalids, but with no visible results that were at all encouraging, and at last they came home almost disheartened. Dr. Howell finally prescribed a sea-voyage, and a sojourn of some weeks at Eaux Bonne in the Pyrenees, as those waters had effected some remarkable cures.

As the doctor quitted the parlor, where he held a conference with Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, the latter turned to her hubband, sayin Felix under the state of the state

They went upstairs together, and paused on the threshold of Felix's room to observe what was passing within.

The boy was propped by pillows into an upright position on the sofa, and was looking curiously into a small basket which Edna held on her lan riously into a small country in the lap.

She was reading to him a touching little letter just received from an invalid child, who had never walked, who was confined always to the house, and wrote to thank her, in sweet, childish style, for a story which she had read in the Magazine, and which made her very hanny.

nette, pansies, and geranium leaves, which she sent with her scrawling letter.

In conclusion, the child asked that the woman whom, without having seen, she yet loved, would be so kind as to give her a list of such books as a little girl ought to study, and to write her "just a few lines" that she could keep under her pillow, to look at now and then. As Edna finished reading the note, Felix took it, to examine the small, indistinct characters, and

"Oh, mamma! come smell this mignonnette. Why can't we grow some in boxes in our windows?"

Mr. Andrews leaned over his son's pillow, softly put his hand on the boy's forehead, and softly put his hand on the boy's forehead, and said:

"My son, Miss Earl professes to love you very much, but I doubt whether she really means all she says; and I am determined to satisfy myself fully. Just now I cannot leave my business, but mamma intends to take you to Europe next week, and I want to know whether Miss Earl will leave all her admirers here, and go with you and help mamma to nurse you. Do you think she will?"

Mrs. Andrews stood with her hand resting on the shoulder of the governess, watching the varying expression of her child's countenance.
"I think, papa—I hope she will; I believe she—"

He paused, and, struggling up from his pillows, he stretched out his poor little arms, and exclaimed:

"Oh, Edna! you will go with me? You promised you would never forsake me! Tell papa you will go."

His head was on her shoulder, his arms were clasped tightly around her neck. She hid her face on his, and was silent.

Mr. Andrews placed his hand on the orphan's bowed head.

"Miss Earl, you must let me tell you that I look upon you as a member of my family; that my wife and I love you almost as well as if you were one of our children; and I hope you will not refuse to accompany Kate on the tour she contemplates. Let me take your own father's place; and I shall regard it as a great favor to me and mine if you will consent to go, and allow me to treat you always as I do my Hattie. I have no doubt you will derive as much benefit from traveling, as I certainly hope for Felix."

"Thank you, Mr. Andrews, I appreciate your generosity, and I prize the affection and confidence which you and your wife have shown me. I came, an utter stranger, into your house, and you kindly made me one of the family circle. I am alone in the world, and have become strongly attached to your children. Felix is not merely my dear pupil, he is my brother, my companion, my little darling! I cannot be separated from him. Next to his mother he belongs to me. Oh! I will travel with him anywhere that you and Mrs. Andrews think it best he should go. I will never, never leave him!"

She disengaged the boy's arms, laid him back on his pillows, and went to her own room.

In the midst of prompt preparations for departure, Edna's new novel appeared. She had christened it "Shinno Theorem On Fage 12)

The League of Cousins was founded as a means of bringing the scattered members of Comporata immense circle of readers into one big, happy family. Its aim is to promote a feeling of kinship and relationship among all readers. It was primarily started as a society for the juvenile members of Comporat's family, ouly, but those of more mature years clamored for admittance so persistently that it was deemed advisable to impose no age limit; thus all are eligible to admittance into our League provided they conform to its rules and are animated by the child spirit.

Though the older folks are admitted, the young folks will always be the first consideration, and Uncle Charlie will write his page with a view of entertaining our young people solely.

Those who wish to join our League can do so by subscribing to Comport for one year or inducing some one else to subscribe, and sending us their subscription. No premiums will be given those sending in members for the League.

If you are already a subscriber you can join by renewing your subscription, or subscribing a year ahead. You can have the membership card and button sent to yourself and the Comport to a friend, if you already take the paper. SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

Crit Truman and his assistant, Raiph Dayton are called from New York to Chicago, by the United Police, to assist in suppressing crime. The leader is variously described, recall the recapture of "The Man with Many Allases," Jim Hollis, Jim Holmes, Chris Dougherty, and the blow which splits him from the nostril to his mouth, and which, when healed, might pass for a harelly. "How is our work?" asks Crit. There are several cases in our line. There's a missing girl and a lewelry robbetry on Time. There's a missing girl and a lewelry robbetry on tells Raiph to wire the Police, get Peter, and we'll outline a general pian.

Percy Mandeville calls to see Sylvia Lyster; she tells him the call must be final. She calls a servant to show him out. Sylvia, befriending Kathle Mandeville, confides to her that her husband makes a proposal of marriage engaged to Sylvia. While Crit and Raiph are on the way to Chicago, the former has a telegram. "Percy Mandeville disappeared. Think he went to Chicago. Took Sylvia Lyster with him," signed by the President of the bank. The Chief of Police tells Crit of a hold-up in a saloon a month previous. A STRANGE REVELATION.

Vainly she regretted the impulse which had prompted her to run away from the lover who adored her, because of the mystery which she had imagined lay about her birth which she sobbed, but now she felt it was too late. With Crit Truman dead, she had nothing to hope, for in spite of her assumed confidence in the young detective who had visited, she felt that if his chief had been killed, he would not be able to help her.

"I wonder if it would be wicked to kill myself," she thought, then tried to dismiss the thought.

As she lay there, utterly exhausted by the various exciting events of the day, she heard the door open, and saw someone enter her room. Starting to her feet, she was stopped by a low voice saying:

"Walt Miss Lyster, I am a friend."

Bending closer, she saw what she thought was Ferris's evil face, but there was a difference. The eyes looking into her own were not the strangely contracted ones of the opium fiend, but clear, honest ones, in which she read truth and sincerity.

"Who are you?" she breathed.

"One of Crit Truman's men," was the reassuring reply.

"Is he still alive?" she asked eagerly.

"Indeed he is." Peter said decidedly, for it was he in his superb disguise as Ferris.

"But I was told he was dead," she faltered. Peter laughed a little scornfully:

"The man doesn't live who can outwith him.

Peter laughed a little scornfully:

"The man doesn't live who can outwit him, and certainly not Jim Hollis. What I wanted to tell you is to be of good heart. Take this, and defend yourself if necessary," pressing into her hot hand an automatic Colt's. The fingers of the little hand clasped the weapon, and she cried gratefully:

"I'm sure I can never repay you noble men for helping me as you have. Yes, I can use it. Mr. Lyster taught me how."

"Say your father." Peter said quietly.

"Do you mean it?"

"Yes, you need have no further fear. You are his daughter," and then Peter left her. happy in the thought that she was worthy to become the wife of Custer Quex, and grateful

SOME VERY CLEVER WORK.

"Are you sure?"
"Perfectly Mr. Golder. I think my credentials ought to convince you."
"Sure thing, but it seems a funny thing to do."
"Mr. Golder, I insist," chimed another voice, and the chief of police looked a little dangerous.
"Of course chief, you know best, and I don't want to get stuckup, but it sounds fishy."
The chief of police looked his anger. For months he had been working loyally and thoroughly; he had put aside his professional pride and summoned Crit Truman, and now, when victory was in sight, to be disturbed by this man.

with sternness, and something like a threat in his voice, he said severely:

"I tell you, you must agree to the plan presented by these gentlemen," indicating Crit and Raiph.

The man, the proprietor of a small saloon, looked undecided, and then Crit stepped into the breach.

"Suppose, chief, my assistant and I makeup as we propose, and then Mr. Golder can see that we are not talking through our tiles as it were."

"Yes," assented the saloonkeeper. "If you two can make good on the matter of disguise, I'll do as you say. I don't believe you can, though," he added doubtfully.

"Wait." Crit smiled, and Ralph threw back his head and laughed.

"Give us an inner room," Crit said, and once inside it, he stood the proprietor up before him, while Ralph did the same for the barkeeper. Business was slack, and the assistant had not gone home, so he was left in charge. To see, however, that nothing underhand was done, the chief sat where he was hidden, and yet could see the whole room.

The two detectives worked rapidly, then Crit said pleasantly:

"Give me your collar, necktie, coat and vest, Mr. Golder, thanks."

Ralph had donned the white jacket of the barkeeper, and tied his apron about his waist, and the faces of the two men were studies as they gazed upon the altered ones of the detectives. Mr. Golder grew pale as death when he saw how entirely Crit had been able to copy his rather peculiar face, while the barkeeper was willing to swear that there was magic in the transformation. The proprietor had no more objections to make. A man who could work such a wonderful change was to be trusted.

Crit then unfolded his pian more fully. The proprietor and his barkeeper were to keep in an upper room, while Crit and Ralph returned to the saloon, and stood becitives returned to the saloon, and stood being utterly fooled by their clever disguises, and said:

"I've heard of you two, but this is too much," and again he had to stop.

Easy Washing in 6 Minutes

HERE'S a washer that washes a tubful of dirty clothes clean in six minutes. And all you need do is sit beside the washer and help it along with little pushes and pulls that take hardly any effort at all.

This 1900 Gravity Washer is so made that the weight of the tub and the little patent links under the tub do all the real work of the washing.

They keep the tub swinging back and forth and

They keep the tub swinging back and forth and up and down with a "tip-turning"—or "oscillating" motion. ing" motion.

And this sends the hot, soapy water in the tub swirling over, and under, and round the clothes until all the dirt is washed out.

The clothes are held still—so they can't possibly be injured.

The clothes are held still—so they can't possibly be injured.

There is nothing to pull and haul them about—nothing to best nor pound them—nothing to wear nor tear them.

You can wash laces in a 1900 Gravity Washer and never injure a mesh.

And you can even wash rugs and carpets without tiring yourself.

The 1900 Gravity Washer washes so quickly—so easily—and so thoroughly that any ordinary wash will be on the line by nine o'clock wash-day morning.

And you won't be "all best out" when the washing is finished. For there isn't enough work to tire even a very delicate woman.

You won't be "steam soaked." For the steam is kept in the washer to help wash the clothes clean. Thus your health is protected and kept from exposure.

Of course, the savings effected by a 1900 Gravity Washer—savings of time and strength and wear on clothes—are worth a lot to you.

And the 1900 Gravity Washer is the only washer that will effect such savings, because these savings are all due to the working parts of the washer, which make it wash quickly and easily, while the clothes are held still.

The working parts of the 1900 Gravity Washer cannot be imitated. Because they are patented. Therefore only the looks of my 1960 Gravity Washer can be imitated.

I have sold tens and tens of thousands of my washers during the past few years.
Thousands upon thousands of pleased women users can tell you how my washers save.
But I don't ask you to take even the testimony of actual users of my washers.
I say "Prove a 1800 Gravity Washer for yourself and—at my expense."
I'll send a washer to any responsible party and prepay the freight.
I'll ship you a washer promptly so you can have it at once. And you don't have to send me a copper in advance.

prepay the freight.

I'll ship you a washer promptly so you can have it at once. And you don't have to send me a copper in advance.

All you do is take the washer and use it a month. Do four weeks' washings with it.

And if you don't find the 1900 Gravity Washer all I claim—if it deesn't save exactly as I say—if it doesn't wash quicker, and easier, and cheaper, and more economically than you have ever washed before—don't keep the washer.

Just tell me you don't want it, and that will settle the matter.

Just tell me you don't want it, and that will settle the matter.

I offer to leave the decision to you.

And the test shan't cost you a penny.

The month's use of the washer is—FREE.

If you want to keep my washer—if you are pleused and satisfied—if you see where my washer will save time and strength and clothes—and, in that way, save money enough to pay for itself in a few months—why, I'll let you Pay for the Washer as it saves for You.

Pay by the week—or by the month—suit yourself. This way you really Let the Washer Pay for Itself Out of What It Saves.

The young man was game, and did not falter, although he turned white as death.

Scarcely had Crit time to place himself where he commanded the room, although he was apparently leaning over one of the men sitting drinking, when the door again opened and four men, masked, stepped into the room, with drawn revolvers.

parently leaning over one of the men sitting drinking, when the door again opened and four men, masked, stepped into the room, with drawn revolvers.

"Hands up!" said the well-known voice of Jim Hollis.

Instantly Ralph raised his hands and all the men in the room followed suit, including Crit.

It was an exciting moment. Above, Crit could hear the heavy breathing of the three who were watching, but hoped no one else could. The dozen men in the room were panic-stricken, and helpless under four revolvers.

"I'm done with saleons from now on," one said with shivering teeth.

"I wonder if we live in the wild and woolly West," sneered another.

However, talk as they might, all kept hands above heads, while rage surged within.

Systematically the holdup men went through the crowd, clearing out everything. One man's neck was slightly gashed by a knife in the hands of one of the crooks, as he slashed out a diamond collar button, but otherwise no injury was done. At last the men approached rit and Ralph.

"Fake" Pete, covered by the revolver in the hands of Hollis, who did none of the work himself, but covered the others, started to rob the till, his back being turned towards Ralph.

The latter allowed him to take out the money, then, at a signal from Crit, he clutched the crook by the back of the neck, and tumbled with him to the floor behind the bar, and at the same instant Crit felled "Snowthake" with one blow from his powerful right. Hollis gave a yell, and his finger fell upon the trigger, but no explosion followed, and as he sprung forward, his arm was caught by one of his confederates.

"Curse you! Ferris," he cried, "let go!" and he aimed at the head of the man who held him.

A laugh came from under the black mask which was utterly unlike that belonging to the young crook, and Hollis realized that once again he had met his match.

"Another spy," he shouted, tearing the mask from the man's face. To his astonishment, he saw Ferris's face, then he realized that he was not looking into the opium contracted pupils o person, a person with hands of iron, and fingers of steel.

"The Trumans," he muttered under his breath, and commenced to struggle.

Peter is a fine athletic, but Hollis was a powerful man, and the young detective had more than he could manage. Crit was fully occupied with "Snowflake" who was no mean fighter, while Raiph was bumping about among the various bottles and kegs behind the bar with "Fake" Pete who refused to be conquered or handcuffed.

"Fake" Pete who remark thandcuffed.

The gallant young detective hung on for dear life, but Hollis knew how to defend himself, and he delivered as good as he got. Of course by this time the chief and the proprietor and his man were in the room, but on account of the crowd surging about, no one saw Peter's dire neril.

rown surging about, no one saw reter's dire peril.

It was a wild scene. The holdup men, their black masks torn from their faces, struggling with the officers of the law; the money and valuables collected by these desperadoes lying in a heap, and each man trying to regain possession of his property; the money from the till lying on the counter behind which were issuing such cries of terror, but not from Ralph. At last the latter emerged triumphant, dragging with him a very bloody, exhausted crook, hand-cuffed hands and feet, and just as he did so, Crit decorated his man in a similar manner, an both scrambled to Peter's aid.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Do it Now! Don't Wait Until It's Too Late!

DEEP your body clean!

Most people are very neat and clean in their outward appearance, but how about the inside?

Are you clean inside?

And if not, how can you face the world with clean thoughts, clear intelligence, a fair, just, bright mind and get your full share of capacity for work and enjoyment?

Neglect of exercise, rich over-feeding and carelessness about stools, often leave the delicate internal mechanism in a nasty mess.

The small intestine is compelled to absorb the poison of decaying matter instead of wholesome nourishment.

The liver gets inactive; the bile doesn't "work off"; the eyes get yellow; the skin gets dead like putty and pale like dough, disfigured with boils, pimples, blackheads and liver-spots.

There's only one solution to the problem: Keep clean inside all the time. That's the answer.

If you can not diet, or keep your mechanism going by proper exercise, take Cascarets, the sweet, fragrant, harmless little vegetable tablets, that "act like exercise" on your bowels, and gently but powerfully clean out and disinfect the whole digestive canal.

A Cascaret every night before going to bed will "work while you sleep" and make you "feel fine in the morning."

If you have been neglecting yourself for some time, take a Cascaret night and morning and break up the "constipated habit" without acquiring a "cathartic habit."

Cascarets are sold by all druggists, 10c, 25c and 50c. The 10c size trial box is a neat fit for the vest pocket or lady's purse.

Be sure to get the genuine with the "long-tailed C" on the box and the letters "CCC" on each tablet. They are never sold in bulk.

"Virtue itself offends when coupled with forbidding manners."—Bishop Middleton.

In order to meet the demand for information made by COMFORT readers on the kindred subjects of Etiquette and Personal Appearance, this column will be devoted to them, and all quessions will be answered, but no inquirer shall ask more than two questions each month. We would suggest to readers to cut this column out and paste it in a scrap book. Address letters to Etiquette Editor, COMFORT, Augusta Maine.

Marie, Lodi, Wis.—It is not necessary for two persons to speak to each other if the man raises his hat in passing. The bow is sufficient. If they stop to speak to each other it depends upon what they have to talk about what they shall say. (2) The young man who winks at the young lady should be slapped in the face, not by the lady, but by some man who can siap good and hard. (3) A brother's rights at a dance are not held to be very binding, and his sister can dance with as many young men as she pleases. However, she should consult her brother and not slight him. A bow and a smile are enough answer to thanks for a dance, unless the girl wants to say more.

C. W., Norman, Ill.—In our judgment, the young lady is merely testing you to see whether or not you will keep guessing what she means. If you will continue guessing she will in time let you call on her, and maybe you will think enough of each other to enter into more permanent arrangements. We do not admire that style of young woman, but possibly you do. If you do, go right ahead doing as you now are, and we think you will get her by and by.

Comfort Girlie, Waterville, Kans.—You may use depilatories or not as you please, but they and we think you will get her by and by.

Comfort Girlie, Waterville, Kans.—You may use depilatories or not as you please, but they are not permanent. Electrolysis, done by specialists, is the only thing that will remove hair permanently. The recipes you mention are as good as any, and harmless as any. No depilatory is entirely harmless, we think buttermilk will not make the hair grow on the face to an alarming extent. If you find it good for tan and freckles, go on using it. Better use cold cream, or some of the many complexion preparations to be had at all drug stores. Most of them are harmless. Plenty of hot water, pure soap, simple food and healthy exercise are the best remedies for poor complexions. See answers in Family Doctor column on the subject of depilatories.

Ignorant, Winston, Mont.—We believe in just of depilatories.

Ignorant, Winston, Mont.—We believe in just as little mourning wear as possible, especially for young people. The custom is, we believe, to wear black for two years for parents. Don't do it. Neither go gayly decked, as if you were glad they were gone, but dress soberly and becomingly. As to social matters, usually several months may elapse before they are resumed at all, but the mourner need not stay away from small affairs. The formal and public things are prohibited until the following season.

(2) Woman has as many ribs as man.

L. N., Galva, Ill.—When the man takes you to a restaurant either may suggest the time to go away, though the lady usually does. But not by rule. She does it because she cannot stay out so late as the man can. (2) Boiled eggs are served in the shell. Isn't that the custom in Galva? (3) Hard cheeses may be eaten from the fingers, but scarcely the soft varieties.

Beginner, Childers, Tex.—You don't want any set rule to ask a girl to go to church with you, or any other place. Simply ask her if you can go with her, and tell her how glad it will make you if she will. That's enough. The most gracefully polite people in the world are those who do it naturally and sincerely.

M. C. M., Marcus, Ia.—You can thin your eyebrows by brushing them with a stiff brush and thinning them out simply by dragging them from their roots. Better not try any other treatment, or you won't have any brows at all. A fine tooth comb will answer the purpose of the brush. brush.

September, Santa Barbara, Cal.—The right sort of a man hasn't a very high opinion of the girl who permits herself to be kissed by him or any other man promiscuously. Promiscuous familiarities of that sort are very cheap and vulgar. Nice girls do not permit it. (2) Don't speak to the man who hasn't manners enough to respond by tipping his hat. Men's manners at their best are none too good.

Sweet William Ironstone Tenn—A girl of six-

Sweet William, Ironstone, Tenn.—A girl of sixteen may be escorted home by a boy if her parents do not object. And she may go to a party with another girl and her brother, even though the brother does not ask her. He leaves that to his sister, and it's all right.

Peggy, Niles, Ill.—Don't let your twelve-year-old sister get into the habit of letting men kiss her because she is a "kid." Now is the time to teach her the proprieties. The men themselves ought to know better.

Orphan Girl, Talladega, Ala.—We haven't space to give you details of a home wedding. Talladega has plenty of fine women in it who know just what is right, and they will tell you. (2) Maybe some Comport reader can tell you where you can get a silk patchwork quilt made. We cannot. Isn't there anybody in your neighborhood who can do it?

J. Jones, Mich.—Thank the person who brings you the message from the absent friend, and say something nice to be conveyed back again. Say anything you please that is pleasant.

Sweet Sixteen, Laton, Cal.—Change your manner to other men, and this one you want may change his manner to you. Evidently you have a nasty disposition, and how can a man like that? If you are going to get along in the world happily, you will have to give and take and scatter smiles as you go. The older you grow the harder you will find it to improve your temper, and now is the time to begin.

Brown-eyed Nellie, Cannonsburg, Pa.—Read in Family Doctor column what we have to say on the subject of hair.

on the subject of hair.

Blue Eyes, Yorktown, Texas.—Be a little cool to the young man who neglects you for another girl. He has no right to set you aside when a new girl appears. And he has no business to pay attention to an engaged girl. We think if you have any other young man in sight, you would do well to drop this one. He'll be treating you a good deal worse if he marries you. (2) If you know who the young man is and all about him, it does not make so much difference about having met him only a few times. But do not be too free to accept attentions from men you don't know about.

Country Belle, Christine, N. D.—Experience

do not be too free to accept attentions from men you don't know about.

Country Belle, Christine, N. D.—Experience is against your renewing the plumpness, though you may improve it by proper exercise. Try chest expansion and deep breathing. Throw the shoulders back as far as possible and repeat it twenty-five or thirty times every night and morning. This will harden the muscles. Stand before an open window and take twenty breaths as deep as you can, breathing in at the nose and out of the mouth. Begin with taking about six to ten, unless you can do more. Usually more than ten will make one dizzy. (2) What is known as cosmetic glove paste, which will whiten the hands is made as follows: Powdered myrrh, one ounce; honey, four ounces; yellow wax, two ounces; rose water, six ounces; glycerine, half ounce. Melt the wax in double boiler, and add myrrh while hot, beat thoroughly and stir in honey and rose water. Add the glycerine little by little to make the paste. Rub over the hands and wear loose gloves.

Brown Eyes, Concord, Tenn.—Tell the boy that you are in school and do not have time to bother with boys. No girl should "keep company with boys" till she is out of school.

Cora, Clatshanie, Ore.—We do not know the address. Ask your druggist.

Cora, Clatshanie, Ore.—We do not know the address. Ask your druggist.

Comfort Reader, Havelock, Neb.—Better let well enough alone. The more doctoring you do to your good looks the worse for you.

to your good looks the worse for you.

Lonely Lamb, Fairdale, N. D.—Proud child, you should tell your troubles to somebody near home. Your wild and beating heart cannot be stilled at the distance of a thousand miles. You are but seventeen short summers now, and the fateful day is yet far off. Suppose you wait till you are twenty-one and then ask us again. By that time you will know ever so much more. And do not be so cruel as to take all the girls' beaus away from them as you say you are now doing. It is not only cruel, but bad form. (2) The hair is June blonde in color.

Brandon Starr, Emerson, N. C.—Certainly it is no disgrace for a lady to pluy a violin, at the stay of the stay pleading 'My son!' of Volumnia, the mother of Coriolanus, that saved Rome."

To discontented spinsters, who traveled like Pandora over the land, haranguing audiences that secretly laughed at and despised them, to these unfortunate women, clamoring for power and influence in the national councils, she pointed out that quiet, happy home at "Barley Wood," whence immortal Hannah More sent forth those writings which did more to tranquilize England, and bar the hearts of its yeomanry against the temptations of red republicanism than all the temptations of red republicanism than all the temptations of red republicanism than all the sent of Parliament.

Some errors of style, which had been pointed out by critics as marring her earlier writings, Edna had endeavored to avoid in this book, which she humbly offered to her countrywomen as the best of which she was capable.

From the day of its appearance it was a success; and she had the gratification of hearing that some of the seed she had sown broadcast in the land fell upon good ground, and promised an abundant harvest.

Many who called to bid her good by on the day before the steamer sailed, found it impossible to disguise their apprehension that she would the rever return; and some who looked tearfully into her face and whispered "God-speed!" thought they saw the dread signet of death set on her white brow.

To Edna it was inexpressibly painful to cross the Atlantic while Mr. Hammond's health was so feeble; and over the long farewell letter which she sent him, with a copy of her new book, the old man wept. Mrs. Murray had seemed entirely estranged since that last day spent at Le Bocage, and had not written a line since the orphan's return to New York. But when she received the new novel, and the affectionate, mournful, meek note that accompanied it, Mrs. mournful, meek note that accompanied it, Mrs.

Murray laid her head on her son's bosom and sobbed aloud.

Dr. Howell and Mr. Manning went with Edna aboard the steamer, and both laughed heartily at her efforts to disengage herself from a pertinacious young book-vender, who, with his arms full of sopies of her own book, stopped her on deck, and volubly extolled its merits, insisting that she should buy one to while away the tedium of the voyage.

Dr. Howell gave final directions concerning the treatment of Felix, and then came to speak to the governess:

Dr. Howell gave final directions concerning the treatment of Felix, and then came to speak to the governess:

"Even now, sadly as you have abused your constitution, I shall have some hope of seeing gray hairs about your temples, if you will give yourself unreservedly to relaxation of mind. You have already accomplished so much that you can certainly afford to rest for some months at least. Read nothing, write nothing (except long letters to me), study nothing but the aspects of nature in European scenery, and you will come back improved to the country that is so justly proud of you. Disobey my injunctions, and I shall soon be called to mourn over the announcement that you have found an early grave, far from your native land, and among total strangers. God bless you, dear child! and bring you safely back to us."

As he turned away, Mr. Manning took her hand and said:

"I hope to meet you in Rome early in February. If I should never see you again in this world is there anything that you wish to say to me now?"

"Yes, Mr. Manning. If I should die in Europe, have my body brought back to America and carried to the South—my own dear South, that I love so well—and bury me close to Grandpa, where I can sleep quietly in the cool shadow of old Lookout; and be sure, please be sure, to have my name carved just below Grandpa's, on his monument. I want that one marble to stand for us both."

"I will. Is there nothing else?"

Post Card Album That Will Hold Fifty Cards.

Our fifty-card Album is the most attractive on the market. On each page two cards may be displayed; the leaves are very heavy rigid paper stock of a heavy green shade, providing a very tasty and attractive background for all cards, and when two pages are opened together showing four cards, the appearance is extremely attractive, and one cannot neatly preserve a collection of Post Cards unless they are displayed in an Album. And better still, a very nice collection of Souvenir Postal Cards represents the individual and personal thought of absent er distant relatives and friends and they are very entertaining for visitors who end; looking them over; so, that in an Album, arranged in order, they are readily accessible and may be examined time after time with no harm to the Cards, and thus preserved in remembrance of the senders. No one thinks of collecting Souvenir Cards without an Album. Everyone wants an Album and the demand, just now, exceeds the supply. We are fortunate in having a great quantity on hand of first-class Albums which we are to distribute as premiums to those who will send us clubs of subscribers to this magazine as per our offer below.

Mrs. J. C.—We are of the opinion, that the property of your husband sold after his death to pay claims does not form any part of his estate and that his heirs or next of kin have no claim upon the property so sold, unless there was some fraud in connection with the sale, or unless the property was bought in by the administrator, executor or trustee of the estate, in which event their fiduciary capacity might preclude them from making such purchase.

K. M. C.-We think that you might be able to prove th K. M. C.—We think that you might be able to prove the marriage you mention by some witness, who was present at the ceremony, or by the minister who performed it, or, in case he is not living, some member of his family may have some record kept by him. If the ceremony was performed in a city or municipality, the board of health should have a record of marriages. Possibly, if all the records have been lost or destroyed, it may be possible to other witnesses since the ceremony was performed.

Mrs. B. H. F. We think that you should sue the young other witnesses since the ceremony was performed.

Mrs. R. H. F.—We think that you should sue the young man who owes you the money and have your claim reduced to judgment and keep the judgment alive, so as to prevent it from becoming outlawed. In that way you could have an execution issued against his property in case he should acquire any. Of course, if he has no property now, it would be possible for him to go through bankruptey and have your claim discharged, in which event you would lose your money; but we think he would hardly do that, unless his debts amount to more than your claim against him.

C. G.—We are of the opinion, that the facts you state

C. G.—We are of the opinion, that the facts you state would in no wise invalidate a marriage, and that, if the marriage was in all other respects regular, it would be a valid one.

H. R.—We are of the opinion, that the original term of copyright runs for twenty-eight years, and that within six months before the end of that time the author or designer, or his widow, or children, may secure a renewal for the further term of fourteen years, making forty-two in all. The remedy in case of infringement we think would be by an injunction suit to prevent such infringement, or by an action for damages.

ment, or by an action for damages.

Mrs. F. G. P.—We are of the opinion, that the man you mention should have given his own name, but we do not, however, think that his neglect to do so would of itself invalidate the marriage. We think he has simply made himself liable to punishment for using an assumed name. At some future time their might be some question as to the identity of the man who got married.

M. O.—We are of the opinion that, under the laws of the State you mention, women become of age when they reach the age of consent when they are eighteen years old. In other words they can marry without their parents' or guardians' consent at eighteen, but cannot transact business or control their property until they are twenty-one. Subscriber.—Under the laws of the State you mention, ness or control their property until they are twenty-one. Subscriber.—Under the laws of the State you mention, we are of the opinion that, upon the death of the husband, leaving no will, and leaving no children or descendants, the community property, both real and personal would be divided one half to his widow and one half to his father, mother, brothers, sisters or the descendant or descendants of a brother or sister, but that, if he leaves only a widow and no father, mother, brother, sister nor any descendant of a brother or sister, then the whole property would go to the widow.

C. I. H. —Under the laws of the State you mention, we sister nor any descendant of a brother or sister, then the whole property would go to the widow.

C. L. H.—Under the laws of the State you mention, we are of the opinion, that, when any person dies intestate (without a will), his property, except the homestead and certain personal property, after payment of debts and expenses of administration, unless limited by marriage contract, is visitributed as follows:—if the decedent leaves a surviving husband or wife, and only one child, in equal shares to each; if more than one child, one third goes to the surviving husband or wife, and the remainder goes to the children in equal shares. We think that the appraisal should have been accurate, but that the fact that it was not, does not relieve the administrator, as the true test is the amount he receives upon the bale of the assets of the estate and that is the amount he must account for, and each heir's share is determined according to the law as above stated upon this basis; the only way the appraisal, at a lower value than the true value, would affect this is that it will be necessary for him to realize at least the appraised value upon the sale, and in case he should be dishonent he might sell the assets of the estate at the appraised value, or very little above, and in that way the estate and the heirs would be the sufferers. In case the widow dies without a will, her estate will be distributed as above, any child or children she may have by her second marriage sharing equally from her estate with the child or children of her first marriage. Her share of her husband's estate does not revert to her husband's estate. We think it will be necessary for the minor heirs to have a general guardian of their property. In most States, we think, a minor has the right of selection of their own guardian after they arrive at some fixed age of discretion, which age in some States is fixed at fourteen, and such a guardian would be appointed by the Court upon their petition. We think that the necessary expenses of attending school

K. F. M.—We are of the opinion that, unless the young lady you mention has given the furniture to her parents, she is the owner of it. We think that a parent is entitled to the wages of a minor son or daughter, but if he neglects to take them as they are earned, we do not think he is entitled to their savings.

Mrs. M. E. W.—Upon your statements to ua, we are of the opinion that, unless the man you mention should dispose of his property by will, his children by his first marriage would, upon his death, be entitled to their share in his estate. The children of both marriages would have equal rights in his estate.

would have equal rights in his estate.

Mrs. G. B.—We are of the opinion that the use of fictitious names is illegal. We do not think that it would be illegal to receive and receipt for a registered letter addressed to another, provided the person doing so was properly authorised, but we think that to withhold the same from the person to whom it belonged would be a punishable offence, unless the person doing so was properly authorized.

properly authorized.

L. J. T.—Under the laws of the State you mention, we are of the opinion that, if your grandfather left no will, his property would be divided as follows:—his real estate, subject to a right of dower of his widow (a one third interest for her life), would go in equal shares to his children and the lawful issue of any deceased child; and his personal property, after certain provisions for his widow's support and the support of his union children, would be distributed under the same rule, except that the widow would share equally with the children, she taking the same share as a child. You should bring the proper proceeding in the County Court of the County where he died to enforce your rights in his estate, first making sure he left no will cutting you off from any interest in his estate.

Conducted by Cousin Marion

In order that each cousin may be answered a this column, no cousin must ask more than aree questions in one Month,

HE first month of summer when the June roses blow and the whole world is filled with color and fragrance. Isn't it lovely to think how sweet the world is in June? Poets sing it and painters paint it, but, my dears, unless you let it get into your hearts and your lives it might as well be weeds and cloudy weather. Outside nature is happy and bright in June, and inside nature should be like it. Look into your hearts and into the faces of the flowers, and make them smile at each other and all the world. Even work is pleasant then, so believing that you will do as I say, let us go to work. HE first month of summer when the

The first letter is from a Sad School Girl of Cumberland City, Tenn., who is in a peck of trouble because she refused to walk with the cousin of the man she loved, and now both of them are "mad at" her. That's what comes of school girls bothering with beaus instead of books. Books don't do that way, so I beseech this sad cousin to devote herself to her books and let the beaus scratch their mad places, as my mamma used so say to me. My, my, what a painful and awful thing young love is.

Lonely Star. Lamar. Ind.—Among refined peo-

Lonely Star, Lamar, Ind.—Among refined people it is the custom when an engagement is broken for both parties to return all presents. Certainly one would scarcely want what could be reminders only of what is unpleasant and to be forgotten. be forgotten.

be forgotten.

Blue Belle, Atlanta, Ga.—It is not wise for a girl of fifteen to go with a man of thirty or at any other age, unless she goes with him as she would go with her fatner or brother. (2) Why trust a person a second time? Isn't once enough? Do you like to be deceived? (3) Don't visit the young man at his place of business. You interfere with his work, and make yourself conspicuous besides, which is worse.

Pearl, Muskegon, Mich.—If you know music well enough to teach it, your public school education in other branches is quite enough.

Jo and Teddy, Lincoln, Ark.—It is not exactly immodest to try to have the young man like you, or to find out f'om someone if he does, but it is a waste of time. If he likes you he will let you know, be sure of that. If he does not, nothing on earth can make him. He couldn't do it himself if he didn't want to. (2) Wear your dresses as do other girls in your community, and wear your hair in the most becoming way, whatever the prevailing style is.

Blue Eyes, North, Miss.—If you love each other and there are no objections to your marry.

Blue Eyes, North, Miss.—If you love each other and there are no objections to your marrying, then, of course, marry and be happy. No matter if he did have another sweetheart—you are the one he wants to marry. Isn't that enough?

are the one he wants to marry. Isn't that enough?

Broken Heart, Renick, Mo.—My, but you are a silly girl. You fall in love with a fellow you know nothing about, and when he shows you that he does not care for you, you still go on loving him and wanting him as your very own. Now wouldn't he make home happy for you? And you say he flirts with all the girls. And you say you are so unhappy that you want to die. My, my, go jump into the river. But not where it is over your head. When you have waded out and see him on the bank laughing at you all wet and draggly maybe you won't love him so passionately. Try it, anyway.

Troubled Darling, Dempster, S. D.—Write the man a nice letter like the one you have written to me and all will be forgiven.

P. M. B., Bellingham, Wash.—It may be quite proper to accept the tip, as a waitress, but do not let your acquaintance go farther with the tipper. No exchanging of names and addresses. Men of that kind are not to be trusted at all. (2) A little bit of slang like that will not do any harm. But the less slang the better.

Hyacinth, Franklin, Neb.—Tell the young man you think it is time to break the engagement. If he permits it to be broken, you may know very surely that he does not want to marry you. That being true, you don't want to marry lim, do you?

Mayflower, Avon, S. D.—Possibly not, for one time, but it will if you permit it to continue.

Mayflower, Avon, S. D.—Possibly not, for one ime, but it will if you permit it to continue.

Beatrice and Valentine, Greeley, Kans.—I won't scold at your silly questions, if you will agree not to ask any more, and put your whole minds on your studies. You need to think more about being women, than cowboys.

being women, than cowboys.

White Rose, Chandler, S. C.—The matter is one that can only be settled by yourself. If you do not believe the stories told against the man and he is all right, you should marry him. Nobody can tell how it will turn out until you have tried it. You are not running as great a risk as if you had never heard the stories.

Broken-hearted Louise, Merriles, Wis.—If the young man is all right and quite able to support you and give you the same social position you have always had, I don't see why you shouldn't marry him, even though your mother isn't very favorably disposed. (2) No objection to a photograph on a postal, or to small presents.

Bridle Wreath, Ryde, Cal.—You had better wait till you are thirty and he is sixty. Fifteen is too young to marry. P. S. I have followed your spelling, but why "Bridle"? Is it a wreath on a head-stall?

Belfe of Arizona, Hillside, Ariz.—If he thought

Belle of Arizona, Hillside, Ariz.—If he thought as much of you as he says, he would write to you when he goes away off to Texas. You write to him and ask him what is the matter. If he cannot tell you straight and honest, don't have anything more to do with him. It may hurt to give him up, but not anything like as much as to have to live with him and suffer for years and years. (2) You can visit your sweetheart's mother, if she asks you to do so.

mother, if she asks you to do so.

P. H. N., Grayson, Ky.—When a girl marries she should remember that her husband's people become her people, and if they are not the kind she has been accustomed to, she will not find it easy to accommodate herself to her new kin. It takes a lot of love to smooth out such rough places, and unless you have that sort of love you should not marry into his family. At the same time, it is not to be forgotten that so called "nice" people are not always nice to get along with. Marriage is a risk any way you take it.

Rock Hill Girl, Green Top, Mo.—If he wants you to marry him, marry bim, if you love him, even if you do think you are not so superior as he is. The "superior" women are not the most lovable, nor are they always the best wives. (2) The words are German, and besides the first one, which I fail to make out, mean Work and Love and Home. That is very nice.

Perplexed Cousin, Clayton, Ill.—You did quite right in leading your bashful cousin to the pew, and you should be glad that you had the chance to teach him. Now be a real lady and continue to teach him till he knows what to do and how to do it. It is part of a woman's mission to make gentlemen of ordinary men: You also ought to teach a little good manners to the young chaps who make fun of your cousin. (2) Ask the backward young man that likes you to call on you. Be nice to him, and he'll tell you what he thinks.

Farmer's Daughter, Rutledge, Tenn.—Keep on not answering his letters. He'll learn by and by that you do not want to write to him. It takes some people a long time to learn anything.

some people a long time to learn anything.

R. L. K., Cincinnati, O.—Just at this time in your courtship, a year's separation would be of benefit to both of you. In that time he would be able to establish himself in his new home, and you would have time to think whether or not you should go to his home and become part of it. If you love each other right, the year will not be long, and will only make you understand how much you are to each other.

A. D. Crete. Ill.—It seems to me that be-

A. D., Crete, Ill.—It seems to me that between you and your sister you should be able to suppress your brother-in-law. I have no patience with a man of his kind, and you should make him keep his place even if you have to stop visiting your sister. (2) what you are doing for the shut-ins is very kind, but don't let yourself get too much interested in the letters to the men. Exchanging photographs is not necessary.

Alverta, Ashland, Pa.—You did quite right in staying away from the dance on account of your cousin's death, even if you did not know her personally. (2)1 don't think luck has anything to do with it, but the finger of the glove is always cut so the bride can put the ring on her bare finger. (2) You are foolish to think friends come to see you because you have nice things in your house or do not. Real friends like you, not your house furnishings. Ask them to come in, and if you think your house is not as nice as it should be, try to make it so. A little taste and work and less money will make a cozy corner of a barn.

A. B. C. Prayne, Okla.—Wait until you are a cozy corner of a barn.

A. B. C., Prague, Okla.—Wait until you are twenty-one, and see what you think of marrying a man twenty years older than you are. Certainly you shouldn't marry at fifteen. (2) The only way to cure a flirting man is to be a flirt yourself, as far as he is concerned.

Sweet Rose, Fulton, Ill.—Yes, the young man can help the girl put on her coat, but he needn't put his arms around her at the same time. And it means just the same if he squeezes her hand. Don't let him do it.

Don't let him do it.

There, dears, all your questions are duly taken care of, and to your advantage, I hope. One or two young men have written to me, but I have turned their letters over to the Etiquette Editor, as I only talk to the girls. May all the joys of summer-time be with you till we meet again. By, by,

COUSIN MARION.

"Thank you, my dear, good, kind friend! Nothing else."
"Edna, promise me that you will take care of your precious life."
"I will try, Mr. Manning."
Ile looked down into her worn, weary face and sighed, then for the first time he took both her hands, kissed them and left her.
Swiftly the steamer took its way seaward: through the Narrows, past the lighthouse; and the wind sang through the rigging, and the purple hills of Jersey faded from view, proving Neversink a misnomer.

As the cripple sat looking over the solemn, moaning ocean, awed by its brooding gloom, did he catch in the silvery starlight a second glimpse of the rose-colored veils, and snowy vittæ, and purple-edged robes of the Parcæ, spinning and singing as they followed the ship across the sobbing sea? He shivered, and clasping tightly the hand of the governess, said:
"Edna, we shall never see the Neversink again."
"God only knows, dear Felix. His will be

Here is a new idea folding Hat that will furnish fun in quantities for all. A new idea in headgear, practical and useful. If you are troubled with headaches during extremely hot weather, this light weight and comfortable Hat is suitable protection from the suns' hot rays, and serves nearly all purposes of the usual straw hat.

This is a useful and practical Hat, for any purpose or occasion, except in Alaska, being made of thousands of feet of paperet, woven and folded in the most ingenious manner. It is extremely light in weight and appearance. It conforms readily to your head and fits perfectly.

When not in use the Hat folds flat, as shown in the upper illustration, and can be carried in the pocket with no danger of injury. The flexible paper these Hats are made of is strong and durable; one Hat will wear a long time. They are made in a variety of colors, finished perfectly with colored band just like a regular straw hat. People who are outdoors in the summer-time, for labor or leasure, at the seashore or in the field, will find this unique Hat a perfect comfort and convenience. We have imported a whole quantity for our exclusive use, doubtful if you can find them elsewhere, so you should send to us now, as we have them ready to send by mail.

The Family Doctor

So many inquiries are received by COMFORT concerning that a column will be devoted to answering them. The remedies and advice here given are intended only for simple cases; serious cases should be referred to physicians, not to us. COMFORT readers are advised to read carefully the advertisements in this paper, as they will often find in them what they seek through their questions in this column. They will thus save time, labor and postage. Address The Family Doctor, Comfort, Augusta, Maine.

M. M. G. K., Altamont, Ill.—The over-development of the right side is not unusual, and the cause as a rule is, that the right side is more frequently used. You can assist the development of the left side by exercising, or better still, by massaging, which is exercise in a more direct form. Constant massage of any undeveloped part will increase its size. Get a book on physical culture, which devotes itself especially to the subject of muscle development, and read it. However, if the development, and read it. However, if the development of the two sides are not very different, and there is no inconvenience arising, you had better let it go as it is. (2) Freckles, unless they are sun freckles, which will disappear of themselves, are best let alone, or treated simply, that is by the usual face powders, which will conceal them. As to the pimples and blackheads, press them free of matter and apply a lotion made as follows: Boracic acid, one dram; alcohol, one ounce; rose water, two ounces. Wash the face morning and night with hot water and Castile soap, rinsing it with cold water. Cleanliness is necessary. Use the lotion after washing the face, and press the blackheads out before washing. Eat simple food, with little or no grease, and drink no coffee.

Golden Lock, Auburndale, Wis.—Get from the druggist any good hair tonic that he will recommend. Use it according to directions, and while you are using, thoroughly massage the scalp night and morning. Knead the skin as if it were a batch of bread you were making. That will make the blood circulate about the roots of the hair and give it life. The tonic will be merely additional stimulant. Continue the massaging after you have used up one bottle of tonic. A little vaseline rubbed into the roots once or twice a week will be helpful to the massaging.

T. R. H., Stamford, N. Y.—Don't sleep on your back and don't go to bed until you have taken at least a dozen deep breaths of fresh air, breathing in through the nose and out of the mouth. Keep good company and plenty of it, and don't think about yourself. There is nothing the matter with you, but thinking something is the matter. That is very nearly a disease with some people.

with some people.

T. D., Charlotteville, N. Y.—You cannot remove freekles permanently, except so called sunfreckles, unless you submit to expensive treatment by a specialist. A freckle lotion is made as follows: Corrosive sublimate, two grains; powdered borax, half dram; lemon juice, one ounce; rose water, four ounces. Apply twice a day on absorbent cotton. Label poison, and keep away from children.

keep away from children.

A. J., Bird Island, Minn.—Wear a shoe that won't press on the nail. To stop the ingrowing, cut a notch in the top center of the nail, and another on the side of the ingrowing. Then run a ditch down the nail from the top, cutting in as deep as you can without touching the quick. This will relieve the pressure from the sides and make the nail grow towards the center. Cotton may be used under the sides of the nail, first prying it away from the flesh and cutting it clear. Better go to a chiropodist if there is one handy. After that you can take care of it yourself.

T. A. G. Plainview, Minn. The contraction of the sides and make the nail.

T. A. G., Plainview, Minn.—To reduce your weight eat no foods containing sugar or fats, or starch. Eat brown, or gluten, bread, drink very little water and take plenty of exercise. Lean meat may be eaten, and most of the vegetables except potatoes.

Inquirer, Sandpoint, Idaho.—Our advice is that you consult a physician, even if you do not have the $2 to pay him. Ask him to wait. We do not understand the symptoms you give and cannot account for your condition in the morning. It may be only catarrhal, but you had better find out definitely, before it is too late.

M. M. Dolph, Owe "The heir restrees you

M. M., Dolph, Ore.—The hair restorers you mention are as far as we know about as good as any. Better than any of them is massaging. On this subject see above answer to "Golden Lock." And stop worrying. Worrying is sure to make the hair fall out.

to make the hair fall out.

Young Man, Platteville, Wis.—Don't go South for catarrh, but to the dry, cold air of Colorado, or the dry, hot air of Arizona. Dryness is what you need. A year or two in either of those localities would put you all right, and probably in that time you would have made business arrangements to stay there permanently. Climate usually has more to do with catarrh than any other one cause. You might not have a touch of it out West, for years, and a few weeks or months in the old place would bring it back.

E. A. K., Earl Grey, Can.—It is neuralgia, months in the old place would bring it back.

E. A. K., Earl Grey, Can.—It is neuralgia, not toothache, that is troubling you, and about the only thing you can do for it is local applications of some warming sort. Chloroform liniment, which you get at any drug store, is about the best. Wet a piece of fiannel with it, and hold it tight over the part affected. Keep your hand well covered with additional cloth, so as to confine the fumes of the liniment and keep the air from the skin. It will blister, if you are not careful, but as soon as it gets thoroughly hot, remove the flannel and let the air get to it.

Miss W. G., Atkinson, Neb.—See above to "Golden Lock," and to "M. M. use any more salt water on your hair.

F. J. C., Washingtonville, O.—You haven't paralysis, you only think you have, and as long as you keep on thinking so you will keep on sitting in that chair, and all the doctors on earth can't cure you. They can't cure you, because there is nothing the matter with you. Healthy boys of seventeen don't have paralysis, but they have queer notions sometimes, just as you are having now. Don't you know if there were a sudden fire break out under your chair, you'd jump and run for the open? Of course you would. You see you would forget to think you had paralysis and you'd be all right. Now take this from us; forget it. Brace up and walk. You may be a bit wobbly at first, but walk, walk. Simply say you will walk, and you will walk, that's all. Ask any Christian scientist in your town if that isn't so. Or ask the regular doctors. Really, you ought to be ashamed of yourself sitting there like an old man when you ought to be out banging around with the other boys.

M. C., Raleigh, N. C.—There are many depilatories, none permanent in their effects, or much better than the old-fashioned razor. Here is one: Orpiment, one part; starch and quicklime, ten parts each. Powder the orpiment thoroughly, mix with the starch, and add the lime. Use a little to make a paste with water; spread on the hairy part, let it remain two or three minutes and remove with a blunt knife. Wash with hot water and apply cold cream. This must be repeated whenever the hair grows again, as it will do.

A Few Words by the Editor

member the words of the immortal Lincoln: "This nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and government of the people, for the people, by the people shall not perish from the earth!" Does our government, and does this nation yet fully attain the ideal Lincoln predicted for it? If not, let us all strive to make that ideal the goal of our national ambition. It will be attained only by hard work, and that eternal vigilance which is ever the price of liberty and independence, and the work must begin in the individual, before it can show its full effect in our institutions and our national life. and our national life.

The Jamestown fair, though not the greatest Exposition of its kind, which has been held in this country, is still, doubtless the most unique, and most interesting, both from the events it commemorates, and the picturesqueness of its location on the historic James River. It was on May 13th, 1607, that the good ships, Discovery, God Speed, and Susan Constant, of England, sailed thirty miles up the James River and tethered their boats to the trees on its banks. Here the first settlement of the Anglo Saxon race on this continent took root. A rude log fort was built. It had no sooner been finished than the Algonquin Indians attacked it. One settler was killed and eleven wounded. More ship loads of immigrants arrived from the old country, and the thin settlement spread up the James River. Cold, hunger and pestilence decimated their ranks, while the red skins, under their Chief Powhatan ravaged the settlement constantly. In the winter of 1609-10, the little community suffered from starvation and pestilence to such an extent, that only sixty out of five hundred survived. In 1619 there were one thousand white persons in Virginia. This number was increased later, by immigration to 3,000, but in three years only 1,200 remained, and most of these were later swept away in the great massacre by the Indians. It was out of these terrible disasters, hardships, bloodshed, and suffering, that English civilization on this conrible disasters, hardships, bloodshed, and suffering, that English civilization on this continent first came. It had been a century and more since Columbus had first seen the shores of the New World. The Spaniards had a foothold in Florida, while the French were spreading close the state of the St. Lawrence in ing along the banks of the St. Lawrence in Canada, but Jamestown is really the cradle of American civilization, for it was not until 1620, thirteen years later, that the famous landing of the Pilgrim Fathers at Plymouth Rock, Massachusetts, took place.

In the church which the settlers built in 1614, John Rolfe and Pocahontas were married. Next to Captain John Smith, who was the leading spirit of the community, and whose magnificent bravery and resourcefulness alone kept the settlers from being wiped out of existence, Rolfe and Pocahontas were the most important figures. The Indian maiden was the friend of the settlers, and saved their leader from death at the hands of her father, Chief Powhatan and his braves. After the marriage of Pocahontas and Rolfe, peace was established, and maintained until 1617, when the good Pocahontas died in England. The lust of gold, which the settlers expected to find in abundance, was the magnet which drew most of these adventurous Englishmen to these shores. Gold was not found and some industry was needed to maintain the settlement, and tobacco culture was introduced by John Rolfe. This article became the staple product, and the whole industrial and social life in the South was determined by it. As it required much room for cultivation, large estates naturally resulted. In 1619, twenty negro slaves who had been stolen from Spanish plantations in the West Indies, were brought to Jamestown and sold. This was the beginning of the Afro-American race on this continent. Cheap labor was needed on the tobacco plantations, and the negro fitted into the industrial scheme admirably. The first representative assembly which chusetts, took place. In the church which the settlers built in 1614, negro fitted into the industrial scheme admirably. The first representative assembly which ever gathered in this country met in the church which had witpessed the wedding of Rolfe and Pocahontas. So political liberty, religion and civilization, all had their birth in Jamestown. Lord Delaware came in 1610, and yamestown. Lord Delaware came in 1010, and the first rude church which was then in ruins, was substantially rebuilt by him. A brick church, the ruins of which remain, was begun in 1639, but the location of Jamestown was a bad one, owing to the malarial swamps which exist in its neighborhood. Disastrous fires, too, ravaged the place and finally in 1698 the seat of government was changed to Williams-burg.

Jamestown since then has been but a memory; its ruined tower alone marking the place, which all Americans will ever hold sacred, as it gave us civilization and religion, and was the foundation of those liberties and blessings which we enjoy today.

Your editor would like to impress upon parents the necessity of teaching their children how to behave in regard to the many poor crippled and deformed persons, that are seen on our public streets. Directly a poor hunchback or other afflicted soul enters a street car in one of our pities all even prest one throat in back or other afflicted soul enters a street car in one of our cities, all eyes are at once turned to him. In country districts, the deformed have even a harder time. Some children make it a practice to call after them in derision, nicknames that hurt the poor cripple worse than a blow. The writer has seen children following a deformed person for nearly a mile, jeering, calling nicknames, and in more than one case, throwing stones, until the tormentors were driven away and made to desist by physical force. It is the little things of life that make life bearable, or unbearable. In our religion, and our daily conduct we are continually straining at gnats and swallowing camels. We will exhaust ourselves in trying to enforce some trifling rule of conduct on children that does not amount to anything, and permit them does not amount to anything, and permit them to act as veritable little savages in regard to other things. People should remember that the crippled and deformed did not voluntarily assume their misshapen bodies. The poor stunted hunchback, would, if he could, be a lusty giant, with erect bearing, broad shoulders, and a muscular, well-formed body. No-

Tell them how they ought to thank God they have healthy strong well-formed limbs and have no physical afflictions to bear. Tell them they should endeavor in every possible way to show kindness, and when possible by word and deed, convey sympathy and aid to the unfortunate. The only thing that lifts a man above his fellows is breeding and refinement. When a man has these qualities he is a gentleman; if a woman has them, she is a gentlewoman. These are the true aristrocrats of the world. The monarch, and the nobleman and the president are the true aristrocrats of the world. The monarch, and the nobleman and the president of the United States can claim no higher title than gentleman. When the world becomes thoroughly civilized, it will be when all men and women are refined and gentle, that is gentlemen, and gentlewomen. There will be heaven upon this earth as well as in another world when all people are refined and gentle. Christ was the first true gentleman, pattern your children after Him, and teach them to do unto others as they would have others to do to them.

Bachelors are likely to have a hard time of it, if all men have the same views upon celibacy as those held by the Mayor of Detroit, who has served notice that he will permit only married men to hold office in his municipality. The bachelor tax which has been proposed by many of our law makers will never make a confirmed celibate take unto himself a wife. Ten or twenty dollars a year, your bachelor will cheerfully pay, and remain obstinately single, but a very different condition of things will confront him if he finds all avenues of employment closed to single men. In Detroit, we understand, all to single men. In Detroit, we understand, all unmarried candidates for office, are hunting up the eligible ladies of their acquaintance, with a the eligible ladies of their acquaintance, with a view to matrimony. The man who is not married is only half a man, for not until a man has a wife, home and family, does he entirely fill the highest ideals of manhood and citizenship. The bachelor is a product of our modern civilization, and the way to bring the selfish creature to his senses, is to close all avenues of employment to him, until he takes a wife. This will bring him to reason as nothing else will. Bravo, then for the Mayor of Detroit, and we earnestly trust that every other official in this country will follow his example, until there is not a bachelor of marriageable age in the land.

King Cotton

"Cotton is still king," said a man with a Southern accent, "and the land of Dixie is its kingdom. His Royal Highness will celebrate kingdom. His Royal Highness will celebrate his 300th anniversary at Jamestown, Va., this summer, and he will have a great celebration. In 1800 we produced only 155,500 bales of cotton, and in 1904-5 the crop reached 13,557,000 bales, the banner crop, that of 1905-6 falling to 12 millions and odd. In 1860 we raised 4,669,000 bales with slave labor. The Civil War knocked the crop down one half. After the war it rallied slowly under the conditions, but it rallied and in 1898-9 it was over 11 million bales. Since that time it has never fallen below ten million bales. Manufacturing in the South since that time it has never fallen below ten million bales. Manufacturing in the South came on very slowly, as late as 1870 only 80,000 bales being manufactured there, to 770,000 bales in the North. Up to 1890 the North led, by a million or more bales, but in 1904 the South caught up, and since that time each section manufactures about two million bales. So much for the progress of the South in manufacturing, which she did not try to learn for a hundred years after the North had been doing it. We produce three quarters of the cotton. it. We produce three quarters of the cotton crop of the world, and there is no likelihood that any other country will ever approach us on that line. The throne of King Cotton is firmly fixed in Dixie."

Horse and Horseless

"Last year," said the man with goggles on.
"the value of horse-drawn vehicles manufactured in this country amounted to 116 million dollars, while the horseless, or autos, was 100 millions, showing that the auto will put the horse out if it keeps going. The auto is now used in the cities for all kinds of heavy the horse out if it keeps going. The auto is now used in the cities for all kinds of heavy hauling, the government uses it in the mall service, hospitals have auto ambulances, Cleveland, O., has eight autos in its city service and Marion County, Indiana has bought a $3,000 machine to use in hauling material for road building. In the Northwest the farmers are beginning to use them, and the latest is a carcosting as low as $225 for use by rural mail route carriers. It is estimated that 550,000 autos have been manufactured since 1836, when the auto first got its start, with a value of over a billion dollars. Until a year ago, France led in manufacture, but last year the United States took first place with 60,000 cars as the year's output, to 55,000 for France. England made 28,000, Germany, 22,000, Italy, 19,000, and Belgium, 12,000. In 1901 we made only 314 cars to start we are now ahead of all. Bad roads was what held us back. European roads are vastly superior to ours. For example the autois can ride over fine roads from Madrid to Norway, a distance of 2,600 miles while he can't find a hundred miles of continuous good roads in this whole country. But the auto is bringing us good roads, and it it did no more than that it would be worth all it has cost. No country can be the right kind of a country when it has bad roads. It's like a man with bad blood in can be the right kind of a country when it has bad roads. It's like a man with bad blood in his veins. We imported 1,175 cars last year and exported 173, the American car not being as popular with foreigners as theirs are with us, except our small cars. They don't make that kind abroad. An auto has made the fastest kind abroad. An auto has made the fastest time ever done on wheels by any sort of vehicle—one mile in 28 2-5 seconds. Is it any wonder it is getting there so fast?"

Cheas Living

"One of the real faults of the American who is without means is that he does not know how to live on nothing a week and find himself," said the man who had traveled. "I don't believe in too close economy, but I believe it is safer in the final adjustment than our extravagence among all classes the year in don't believe in too close economy, but I believe it is safer in the final adjustment than our extravagance among all classes, the poor in proportion to their possessions being worse than the rich, for the rich do save enough to keep the wolf from the door, no matter how much they spend. How many of our moneyless people, our working people, have enough laid by to carry them over a spell of hard timee? Not one in a hundred—not one in a thousand, possibly. I don't recommend the style of the French peasants to our American citizens, but they do know how to live behind their incomes. For instance, a peasant with his wife and three children will live on four cents a day. They have a breakfast of bread with a prepared salt fish to spread on it. For dinner, stock fish with vegetable soup or salad. For supper, lentils, beans and other vegetables, with bread always. Most foreigners are great bread eaters. Now and then the peasant indulges in wine at his meal, but water is the chief drink. Meat is very seldom had, but rabbit is sometimes put into the vegetable stew, but only as a luxury. Then they dress poorly, but it is a rare one who hasn't a bank account and is to that extent independent. We do not want a peasant class in America, but we do need more thrift, more eggs in the nest than we est every day." class in America, but we do need more thrift, more eggs in the nest than we eat every day."

Lumber Consumption

"Most people," said the man with a tooth-pick in his mouth, "think that weather-board-ing, flooring and building material generally are what is consuming our lumber so rapidly. True, they do take a lot of it, but think of the are what is consuming our lumber so rapidly. True, they do take a lot of it, but think of the thousands of feet that go into toothpicks like this I am using. Lynn goes to them, and there is not a great deal of lynn in the woods. Fine ladders take the fir, handles and spokes take the hickory, last-blocks use up the rock-maple, paper pulp uses up millions of feet of spruce and poplar, pencils call for red cedar, spools take white birch, and there is the box trade eating into white pine. In New England alone there are 344 box factories, and last year they used six million feet, nearly all white pine. And it is practically wasted, too, for when the boxes have been used once they usually go for kindling wood. Millions of feet of ash and oak go into barrels and other millions go to other uses in comparatively small quantities to each. Wood seems to be of universal use and the time is rapidly coming when we won't have it. Then we have got to hustle for a substitute. We'll get it, of course, just as man gets everything he goes after, but just what it will be nobody knows yet. We do know though that in fencing, barbed wire has saved millions. Waste is the king evil of our, methods of living."

Wallachian Embroidery

HIS season brings among other things, a new method of ornamenting waists, centerpieces, pillows, in fact, articles of all sorts, which can be decorated by embroiders.

centerpieces, pillows, in tace, of all sorts, which can be decorated by embroidery.

The statement that there is "nothing new under the sun," seems especially true in regard to this latest novelty in fancy work, Wallachian embroidery. For it is really nothing but a new way of using the ordinary old buttonhole stitch as one will readily see by the illustrations here given to show the manner in

This embroidery is especially well adapted for decorating lingerie, as the work can be rapidly done, is solid ornamental and will wear well.

Patterns can also be easily worked up by almost anyone who is accustomed to fancy work. Our large illustration shows a corset cover worked in Wallachian embroidery, and although we cannot supply patterns for the design used, Fig 3 which gives half the front and Fig. 4 half the back, illustrates it so plainly that one would have little difficulty in copying it. The scallops around the neck and armhole are padded and buttonhole stitched and the holes to run ribbon through are worked like eyelets. One yard of goods is needed for this pattern and four skeins tern and four skeins of luster cotton.

This design was sent in by Mrs. C. A. Parsons, to wom was awarded the irst prize.

necessary work.

Our first letter is from Mrs. N. R. Cole, Chapel Hill, N. C., a new subscriber, who lives in the foothills of N. C., but who is anxious to make herself known. From her letter we quote the following:

"My husband and I are both especially interested in this corner of Comfort, I am new at housekeeping and I find all the hints valuable. We have one little baby boy seventeen months old. No one knows what pleasure and company a sweet little baby is until they themselves, become a mother.

I am interested in chickens and consider the White Plymouth Rocks to be the best layers. We also have our own cows and hogs.

I like the idea that Mrs. Prudence Morast brought to our minds about heading the letters which we write to Comfort, with some comforting verse from the Bible. But as I forgot it until now, will close with this verse, which I find very helpful: "Cast thy burdens upon the Lord and He will bring it to pass."

I hope many of the Comfort mothers will respond to this appeal by sending whatever their own babies have outgrown. Letters will also be welcomed as Mrs. Reard is a stranger in a strange place. She says: "I hope some of the sisters will be able to help me just a little, as we are expecting a little newcomer very soon. I have been ill and had a train of misfortunes, making it impossible to get the necessary articles. Anything will be welcomed and appreciated. I cannot promise to return the favor immediately, but will be glad to do so when I can. I am very sad and miserable at times, but try to keep up the best I can for the sake of my family whom I dearly love.

I wonder if many of you know that to chew kernels of corn will cure heart burn.

Thanking you all in advance for any kindness, I remain, a sister in need.

Mrs. O. Grover, Box 67, Bangor, R. F. D., 2, as her supply is exhausted. She also requests the invalid who wrote from Trent, Texas, to send a postal, as she was unable to make out the name; others who have received no reply, have stamp.

This is an important item to remember, sisters, when addressing a stranger, for Comfort's family is large, and as the letters are liable to rain in, in response to any announcement, it is only fair that each should bear the expense of postage on the reply which is expected. That is, I mean, if you are asking a favor, of course, if you simply write a sister for the sake of securing a correspondence, then each should pay the postage on their own letters.

Next comes a request from S. D. Can any f the sisters supply the old-fashioned remedy or purifying the blood, which is made of sulpur, syrup and cream of tartar, if so, kindly end direct to Mrs. Rena B. Shaw, Madison, S. I., giving the proper proportions.

Our next writer represents Oregon, and her letter is in part, as follows:

As I live in Oregon and so many want to know about the grand old State, I shall be pleased to tell them of this part of Columbia County. It is about forty-five miles northwest of Portland, two miles of deep water harbor on Columbia river, A. C. R. railroad, running through the town. The annual output of logs and piling is 65,000,000 feet. Fertille farmlands cheap. It is a good fruit, dairying and sheep country. We live seventy-two miles from the Columbia river and the town Rainier, which has about 2,000 inhabitants. Those wanting to know more please send writing material and stamp, and I will gladly answer all questions.

From Georgia comes this request, and also a suggestion for making a home-made rug. Mrs. H. says:

"I am not a shut-in or invalid, but I fear that I am rapidly losing my sight, and I had much rather have some other affliction, but we cannot choose, can we, dear patient sufferers? I just want to tell the sisters how I have utilized corn sacks for rugs. First dye some two colors, then cut into strips, eight inches wide, ravel out all excepting a couple of inches in the center. Make the middle of the rug of one color, and use the other for a border, or one can work out an intricate design by working in stars, circles, diamonds or squares. For the foundation use a plece of ticking, canvas or a sack, cut it the size you wish, then sew one strip on through the center, fold the fringes together, and placing another piece on flat, stitch this through the center, having it as near the first piece as possible. This gives one a thick, durable fringe rug, which will wear and look well. I have one favor to ask. Will the sisters kindly send me seeds of the most popular variety, which grows in your locality, or any old-fashioned flowers, such as our grandmothers loved? I will try to return all favors.

May God bless our editor and each member of this band, is the wish of your sister,

DEAR SISTERS:

As I have never read any letters from this part of the country, and I would like to see it represented in such an interesting circle, thought I would send in a few lines.

I am a widow. My husband died six years ago, and at times, I, too, feel lonely.

This is a good farming country, and this year we are hoping for better luck, as the crops of 1906 were considerably damaged by the two weeks' rain, the last of September, and the storm of the 27th.

I hope to hear from some of you.

Would that all shut-ins could join with me, those from the Atlantic coast, from the sunny South, the cheery North and the glowing East, could see and join in washington during the winter months—but there is much to be thankful for. Indianapolis is represented by Mrs. King, a fifty-year-old sister, who is still young at heart and full of love and sympathy for all God's poor. She says of Indianapolis:

"Ours is a well-governed city. I don't believe any city does more for its poor. In the summer we have a fresh-air mission that does much for the poor sick children. We also have a number of homes of one kind and another for poor unfortunates; this seems good and only right, where there is so much sickness, sorrow and suffering, and is sort of a balance to the numberless beautiful private homes.

"I thoroughly enjoy Comfort and one reason is because it is doing loving work for the shutins. I would be pleased to hear from any of the sisters at any time."

Sisters, I have plenty of pine needles to stuff my sofa pillows and lots to spare. I don't know what I should do should we move where there were no pines, as I have lived all my life among them. We are surrounded by great pine forests, some of the trees are so tall their tops seem close to the sky; the cones are used for making ornaments, picture frames and baskets. I wonder how many of the sisters have to get along without ice. One can very nicely, if they only know how.

For cool drinking water, wrap around a bottle of water an old woolen sleeve or pantaloon leg, or a newspaper, and tie it in place. Soak the covering well and set the bottle in a saucer or bowl of water, in a draft or breeze if you can find one. The porous cover of the bottle will suck up water from the saucer, which should be kept part full, and in a little while the water will be cool.

kept part full, and in a little while the water will be cool.

For a cheap refrigerator, half fill a milk pan with water. Set a flower pot saucer or a soup plate bottom side up, a flat stone, anything heavy enough not to float in the middle of the pan for a floor of your refrigerator above the water level. Set your milk jar, butter, meat, whatever is to be kept cool, on the floor or shelf you have built. Wet a large flower pot and turn it upside down over your provisions. They will keep all right for a day or two.

Butter, or anything which easily takes the flavor of its surroundings, should be wrapped in parafine paper before set into such a refrigerator, or it will get the taste of the clay.

Another way to keep butter without ice is to wrap in paper and then completely cover with flour. This method is used by cowboys, I hear, with great success.

I would like to hear from some of the young mothers, as I have two wee ones.

DEAR SISTERS:

DEAR SISTERS:

I have a little suggestion to make; as we are Germans we have a number of German papers and magazines we could send to shut-ins, if we knew who would enjoy them, so would it not be well to mention one's nationality when making requests. I would like to help a little, but Comforts is our only English paper.

As some of you have mentioned the trips taken in home seeking, let me tell you briefly of our travels. We sailed from Germany to South America, six weeks on the way, during which time my brother aged three and the baby nine months old, died and were buried at sea. We only stayed in St. Paul, South America, two years, there my twin sister and brother were lorm, and on the trip from Rio De Janeiro to New York, my twin brother died, making the third to be buried at sea. My twin sister is still living, and I also have another sister from here.

So you see, we, too, have had our sunshine and shadow, dark days and bright, and can readily appreciate the feelings of those who have recently been bereaved. To all such and the dear shut-ins I extend my sympathy, and if any, who are intellectual in German literature will send me a card, I will mail them some reading matter.

DEAR MRS. WILKINSON:

I enjoy the letters from our sisters and feel that I must thank them, one and all, for their dear little chats.

I am a Mississippian. Our corn is all planted, oats are nearly knee high, and you should just see my garden! I have been eating turnips, lettuce, radishes and onlons for two weeks from it, and it will soon have peas and beans.

I went fishing yesterday. The river woods are so beautiful, they are Nature's palette whereon she spreads her colors of every imaginable shade. Tall, dark green magnolias form a background against which snowy banks of dogwood stand out in relief. Every shade of green is to be seen from the most delicate apple green to the glossy purplish green of the pines. Feathery bunches of wild honeysuckle swing to and fro on their coral stems, perfumings the breeze with their delicous odor. To sit on the mossy bank, with your line going "swish" in the cool water, and watch the ferns wave their graceful fronds on the opposite bank, is a paradise for the "dreamer." How many of you are dreamer? I confess I do a lot of dreaming. I love music, flowers and children, and am a veritable "book-worm."

Miss. Don Allen. Accept my sympathy. I am sending you all some of my choice recipes and hope some will try them.

1806. I doubt if it will ever be crased from our memorles.

The night of April 17 was warm and sultry, no one dreaming that by Wednesday morning the fair city would be a mass of dirt, smoke and confusion. A little after five o'clock P. M. my clock stopped from the shock that seemed to have no special direction; it lasted several seconds, and being so early in the morning, not many people were stirring outdoors, and as I look back I sometimes feel it was a lucky incident, for the loss of life would have been terrible had it happened a few hours later, when working people were on the way to their day's labor.

My present home is in the western part of the at present nome is in the western part of the city. We suffered out here mostly from the shock, walls and tall chimneys were down, a few houses collapsed, and every place filled with plaster and soot.

My present home is in the western part of the city. We suffered out here mostly from the shock, walls and tall chimneys were down, a few houses collapsed, and every place filled with several days on the vacant lots near by, as they effered better protection than home, and half scared to death, not knowing when another shock might come and take the remaining population that were fortunate enough to escape earlier in the day.

I don't how to begin describing the sad scenes; of what happened to those fleeing for safety as the fire started to burn in several parts of the city. The homeless trying to save what they could, everything that had a wheel was put to work, people dragging trunks behind them as express wagons and automobiles were all carrying the wounded as fast as broken streets and debris would permit, all doctors volunteered their services, and every place was turned into a hospital. Everybody seemed willing to help, rich and poor alike dragging baggage from place to place as the fire drove them forward until they finally reached the district around my home. Others camped further out on the beach, all worn out with their exertions.

Friday morning the water front was ablase, and the wind blew hard from the north, sending sparks and fire high above the smoke, and from my stand on Mt. Lome of the same of the district around my them of the supply of water, so we had to trust to reservoirs and private wells in the neighborhood. The people owning the wells were very kind and allowed us to use it as long at it was not wasted. Finally the city sent out its water wagons and supplied the need, but as time went by it wasn't much good for drinking purposes, so we depended mostly on the reservoir in I. O. O. F. Cemetery and the private wells.

When the rews of the disaster became known, supplies began to pour into the city as fast as trains could carry the food, taking away all th

"His eyes are blue," he said, "that ought to please Victoria."

Suddanly the baby puckered up his face

Suddenly the baby puckered up his face and began to cry, and much alarmed, Gene demanded to know the reason for this extraor-

"He's hungry, that's what's the matter," the nurse replied, laconically.
"Of course, and he wants his mother. We will go at once and see if our gracious queen is ready to receive her youthful subject." As Gene left the room the nurse looked after him with nitying eyes.

"If Mr. Warfield has anything of that sort in mind I'm afraid he will be disappointed. These society women aren't like ordinary mothers. There, precious," to the crying baby, "we won't let you starve," And with a gentleness quite out of keeping with her former words, she soothed the child tenderly.

"Dearest," he said softly, "are you awake?"
She unclosed her eyes and looked up at him, a frown on her brow.
Gene was not to be repulsed by this very unpromising beginning, and possessing himself of her little hand that lay nearest him he softly expressed it on he said.

"Do you know, dear, that baby has your beautiful blue eyes? Such a lovely little fellow—not a blemish on him. He is crying for you. Shall I bring him?"
She half turned, in her eyes the hard glitter Gene had learned to dread.
"What for?" she demanded.

At her words a heartfelt feeling crept over him. All his hopes for domestic happiness had been based upon the child, and now he felt that those hopes were doomed to be shattered.

It was at this point the other nurse, a sour-faced woman with thin lips saw fit to inter-

"Mr. Warfield," she said sternly, "if you excite our patient any further you will bring on a fever, and I cannot answer for the consequences. If you have any consideration whatever, you will kindly leave the room."

With a feeling that he was an insensible brute and that Victoria was a much abused woman. Gone went away, and after vainly returned to the nursery.

As he opened the door the little nurse held up a warning finger.

"Careful, Mr. Warfield, he is going to sleep, but come over here if you want to see him eat."

Thus admonished, Gene tiptoed over to the bassinet, where the baby was lying, blinking sleepily and pulling lustily at a bottle.

"I am assured on one point at any rate," said Gene smiling. "By the rapid rate at which that milk is disappearing I take it he which that milk is disappearing I take it he isn't in any immediate danger of starvation." Then he added in a lower tone: "Such a beautiful child—how could any mother—yes darling," bending lower, "your dadda loves you and your mother will in time." And with a kiss so slight it was like a touch of thistledow, on the tiny head, he turned and softly left the room.

"It was just as I expected," the little nurse looked after him, tears standing in her pretty eyes. "Poor man, how I pity him. And you, dear little helpless baby," the tears overflowing and running down her cheeks, "somebody has got to mother you, and if your own mother won't, I will."

The little notice came out in the morning paper and Gene was congratulated by his colleagues.

Coreoran, sitting in his luxurious library read the news with a shrug of his great shoul-

"She is beautiful as an angel, or rather as those mythical beings are supposed to be. I can't seem to understand Warfield lately. He still does my bidding, but he does it under protest. If he dares to go back on me—damn these conscientious people anyway—you never know what minute they'll flunk and chase off after their conscience."

In the months that followed Gene tried to arrive at a better understanding with his wife but finally gave up in despair letting her go whither she would, and took to spending all his spare hours in the nursery, finding there one little oasis of joy in the dreary desert of his domestic life.

He never forgot the first time his baby smiled at him. There is something so fetching about a baby's smile, even the most callous heart finds it hard to resist, and Gene in his heart wished that Victoria might have been present that she, too, might have felt that softening influence.

The little rosy-checked nurse had been retained, and under her loving care he grew and throve till Gene laughingly declared that like Bashan of old he "waxed fat and kicked."

Victoria rarely came near the nursery except for the purpose of giving some peremptory order and at these times her presence never failed to introduce a disturbing element.

It was after one of these rare visitations that Gene entered to find the nurse in tears and the baby screaming with all the force of his little lungs.

Gene demanded the cause and the nurse

"Well. I wouldn't cry if I were you," said Gene. "I know you are doing the very best you can for baby, and I am going now to ask Mrs. Warfield to reverse her decision. I'm sorry, though, that you were saucy to her."

The nurse dashed away her tears with a defiant toss of her head:

"Well, I'm not, Mr. Warfield. I haven't said anything about it to you, but this isn't the first time she has been in here bossing me around and making me do things that aren't

She burst cut angrily:

"I will not keep that saucy minx a minute longer. She actually told me she knew more about the management of babies than I did—I—his own mother. She is spoiling the child cuddling him, and by all the rules of modern child culture, cuddling is the very worst thing that could happen to a baby."

"Then, dear," said Gene smiling, "I'm afraid I'll have to plend guilty to cuddling him, too. And do you know when I was holeing him the other night he spoke a word, the first he has uttered, and that word was 'mamma'—the sweetest word in the world. I was disappointed, for I confess I wanted him to say 'dadda', but I'm sure if you had been there, Victoria, you would have loved him. Won't you try the cuddling process for a little while and see if it isn't the most enjoyable thing in all the world?" Gene paused looking at her pleadingly.

"Victoria!" Gene uttered, but the one word, yet the pain of his tone woud have melted a heart of stone. Attempting no justification—his conduct needed none—and fearing one of those wordy outbursts which had become all too common of late, Gene left the room. On his return several hours later he found the little nurse gone, and the sour-faced woman who had attended Victoria in her illness in-

This was the hour at which Gene and his boy usually had their romps, and could Victoria ha looked in at these times she might have had good cause to be scandalized at the lack of modern methods employed, yet they formed a pleasing group—the rosy, laughing baby lying on a bearskin rug in front of the fire, and Gene on his knees beside him playing peek-a-boo behind the shelter of a fire screen.

Contrary to his expectation Gene found the child asleep. It was breathing heavily, and there was a strange pinched look about the little lips. He, however, noticed nothing unusual, and as the nurse gave him no encouragement to remain, he turned away heartsick, feeling that the last refuge had been denied him.

denied him.

From that hour the little one began to droop. At such times as Warfield had leisure to visit the nursery it happened that he could rarely find the child awake. At first the change was so gradual he scarcely noticed it, but when at length the painful truth broke upon him, and he could no longer disguise from himself the fact that baby was slowly but surely mining away it came upon him.

but surely pining away, it came upon him with the suddenness of a blow.

He consulted physician after physician, but to no avail. Something seemed to be slowly sapping its vitality and within a few months, sapping its vitality and within a few months, from being a happy prattling baby, it faded into a sunken, piteous, appealing infant.

Corcoran was there also. He seemed to have abandoned all things else in his pursuit of Victoria, leaving political affairs to the control of his henchman in the West.

Society looked on and shrugged its shoulders

ing infant in his arms, and people passing by stopped for a second look at the carnest deepset gray eyes, the clean-cut firm jaw, and the tender mobile lips, with their apparent blend of austerity and underlying romance.

Although he was wholly unaware of any change within himself, a new man was awakening. His baby's hands frail and weak though they might be, were plucking down the altar of worldliness and the idol Warfield had erected there. Ambition, was fottering to its rected there, Ambition, was tottering to its

He had no belief in prayer; he had felt for years that all the prayers ever uttered could not make one raindrop fall the less or more, yet now as he looked into the tiny face growing more wan and transparent day by day a deep sorrow took possession of him, and he would stretch out his hands and plend for strength, for assistance. The first time the thought came to him to do this he was out in the open air. The baby was lying on his breast, and the deathlike look on its tiny face tugged hard at his heart. A thrush was the first time she has been in here bossing me around and making me do things that aren't good for baby. It's only because I've grown so fond of the darling that I've staid this long. I'm glad he isn't old enough to miss me any. If I thought he would wake up in the night and stretch out his little arms in the darkness and cry because he couldn't find me, singing in the bushes, and the sound of bees was in the air as he prayed in a low soft voice with a little break in it:

"If it must be, give me strength to bear it."

It was a rainy night several days after the return of the family to Washington, and Victoria, who had been kept indoors by a slight Victoria, who had been kept indoors by a signt indisposition, was annoyed almost to the point of distraction by the incessant wailing of the infant. At length, she opened the door of her room, which adjoined, and eagerly demanded of the nurse:

"Can't you stop that noise? I tell you, give him a dose of laudanum at once."

The nurse turned about from stirring something over a gas flame, and replied gravely:

"Mr. Warfield gave strict orders that no more laudanum was to be administered."

"Who cares what he says? Do as I tell you—get the bottle—quick."

"There isn't any," said the nurse, trying to gain time by temporizing. But Victoria was not to be turned from her purpose.

"There is some on my dressing-table—no—wait—you stupid—Ill get it myself." And leaving the room she presently returned bearing the bottle in her hand.

Fearing to disobey, the nurse produced the indisposition, was annoyed almost to the point

"What is this?" cried Gene, snatching the bottle from her hand, then reading the label he dashed it to the floor, where it broke, filling the air with a sickening odor.

"You devil!" she shricked, and freeing herself with a sudden movement Victoria struck him full upon the mouth, the diamond on her finger cutting a gash in his lip. It was not until she saw the blood trickling down upon his white shirt that she realized what she had done, then flinging herself on a couch she burst into a passion of angry sobs.

In dumb-stricken silence Gene gathered the wailing infant to his breast and without a word or glance at his wife passed out of the room to his study.

room to his study.

"Mamma, mamma," wailed the baby.

"No, darling," he said sadly, "you have no mamma—there is nobody but dadda." Then gently, tenderly, he soothed it until the wailing ceased and it sank into repose. Pillowing the little head on his shoulder he became conscious of the cut on his lip as he saw a stain of blood on his baby's robe. Staying it with the handkerchief he drew a chair in front of his desk. A pile of unopened letters lay there, and searching through these a light came into his sad eyes as he caught sight of a well-known sad eyes as he caught sight of a well-known chirography.

"From mother," he thought, "a letter from her is like a breath from the hills."

"My Dear Son:
We are all very anxious to know how the baby is progressing, so hasten to reply to yours which reached me this afternoon. On the way home from the village I stopped to see old Mrs. Warren and she seemed very pleased at the mention you made of her, said she didn't suppose you would have remembered an old lady like her now that you have become such a great man!"

Gene stopped to wipe away the blood that was dropping down his chin.

"If she could see me now, would she think me a great man?" he thought bitterly.

me a great man? he thought bitterly.

"'And laddle,' the letter went on, 'she came out with that story of how you helped her boy—he died with consumption a week ago, poor fellow—how you helped him out of that scrape he got into at school. You never told me about that, Gene. You hid your light under a bushel, and your mother never found out half your good deeds till after you went away. Still, Gene, she never will call you a great man, no matter what others call you, so long as she hears of your supporting such bills as have passed the House of Representatives this year."

An exclamation of self breathing broke from him:

"You are right, you honest little mother.
Your son is not great—he is a damnable scoundrel."

Somewhere in the distance a door slammed. "Victoria has stopped crying," he thought, then went on with the reading:

then went on with the reading:

"A good many of the old people have died lately. Mrs. Elwell has got a new boy. As this makes the sixth the father is not unduly elated. Your Uncle John is well. He says tell you he raised three hundred bushels of oats and they sold for seventy cents a bushel. He is vastly proud of his herd of Holsteins which took the first prize at the Cattle Fair this year. He gave Theta her choice of the yearlings last year, and she picked out the best one in the lot. He said it was a shame as he wanted to keep that one for himself, but I noticed he took more care of it than any of the rest and was real tickled when it won the blue ribbon. He said that heifer and Theta were good matches, meaning I suppose, that both were blue ribbon girls. Those two are sitting over there by the fire now. Uncle John is eating apples. He eats about nine every night before he goes to bed, says they make him sleep better. He claims his eyesight is failing him, which is just a pretence to get Theta to read to him. He loves the sound of her sweet, low voice as much as I do. She is reading Ingersoll's beautiful Oration at his brother's grave."

He named in sheer astonishment "The pattern and it be possible?" he thought. "But I might have known the constant association with one as broad minded as Uncle John—" he picked up the letter and went on:

"I am afraid, Gene, that Uncle John is spoiling Theta the same as he spoiled you. The old ways seem best to me, and I don't wish to have Theta changed. Do you know, my boy, I am frightened nearly to death for fear I shall lose the dear girl. After you went away, she came into my lonely life and filled it with joy. She didn't take your place—no one could do that—but she filled what was equally good, a daughter's place. There is a young doctor who has lately come to town—I forget whether I told you old Doctor Deane is dead—and he comes up here too often to suit me. Not that Theta treats him with more than simple friendliness as yet, but it is plain to be seen he is very much

N the same day that Richard Clarke fell afoul of Indian John in the woods, Jerry obtained permission to go fishing at Lake Cassalet, four miles distant from the Parkhurst

At this lake the boy felt he would make a much larger hall than from the pond near the house, and he was, consequently, much elated over the prospect.

"I'll bring you some big fish this time, Mehitable," he said, while preparing his lines and

"You take care that you don't fall into the hands of some of the good-for-nothing Indians," returned the spinster.
"Humph! de you think I am afraid of the Indians?" retorted Jerry.
"Well, you had better be. They are not always so peaceable as you think they are."
"I don't believe the Indians would dare to touch me, Hitty. They know well enough that if they did all the settlers would be up in arms against them."
"Do you think the settlers are going to put themselves out for you?" she asked tartly.
"Don't you think they'd do something if the Indians captured you?" asked Jerry.
"Well, that's a different thing."
"I don't see it."
"They always try to protect a young lady,

At this Jerry gave a low whistle.
"Say, Hetty, how would you like to have a tall, nice-looking Indian run off with you?" he went on presently.
"Ugh! Don't mention it."

"And think of living in a wigwam these hot nights. Wouldn't it be fine!"

"Jerry Blue, you are nothing but a born tease. Now clear out with you, or I'll douse you with hot water."

"Then you wouldn't marry an Indian? Too bad. I heard two of the chiefs were after you. One of 'em is rich. He's got three wives already."

"If you don't go, you'll get that water sure!" and Mehitable reached for the dipper, and as the pot of boiling water was conveniently close, Jerry disappeared immediately.

It was an ideal day for any sort of sport, and Jerry was as full of good humor as the lawyer had been when starting out for the deer. He knew the trail well and did not hesitate once while making his way to the distant lake. Only once did he stop while on his journey—to watch the antics of several chipmunks. He tried to bring one down with a stone, but the shot was unsuccessful.

"In on landing it did not take him long to don his clothes. He examined the fish, to find that three had been eaten.

"It's not so bad as it might have been," he reasoned. "But, oh, if only I had had a gun and had hit him in the ear with a bullet instead of that stone! It would have been better. than bringing down that deer I was after the day I peppered that lawyer's hat."

Jerry did not mean to let the bear deprive him of his fish, and so threw in his line once more. For a while he got no bite, but presently he drew up a fish, and four others followed in rapid succession.

"There, that makes up for what I lost," he told himself. "Now it's time I got home, or else they won't let me come this far again. There are a pile of chores to be done before sundown."

With his catch in one hand and his fishing outfit in the other, he turned back toward the larkburst house. As he advanced deeper and only once did he stop while on his journey—to watch the antics of several chipmunks. He tried to bring one down with a stone, but the shot was unsuccessful.

His path lay within half a mile of the Indian village where the trial at archery had occurred. On several occasions the boy had stopped at the village, once on an errand for Mr. Parkhurst, and then again to buy some fancy feathers for Mabel, but never had the red men offered him any harm. It was a period when the Indians and whites were at perfect peace.

At last the distant lake was reached, and finding a spot he knew was good for fishing, Jerry settled down to the spot in earnest. He had brought along what he considered was the best bait for his purpose, and soon his catch justified his judgment.

"Wish Mr. Davenport was along," he mused, after he had brought in his fifth fish. He knew that Henry Davenport enjoyed fishing very much. The two had gone out frequently but now Mabel claimed all of the

He knew that Henry Davenport enjoyed fishing very much. The two had gone out frequently, but now Mabel claimed all of the young man's spare time.

Since the talk with Mabel, Jerry had heard nothing further concerning Dick Clarke or the missing money. The boy had expected to learn something about the girl's visit to the tavern but Mabel remained silent.

"I hope she doesn't change her mind and marry that man, anyway," thought Jerry. "If she does that, what will Mr. Davenport do? I'm half of a mind to tell him what's in the wind. Perhaps he can get hold of this lawyer and make him tell where the box of gold is."

But the boy had given his promise to Mabel, and it was not in his make-up to break his word.

and it was not in his make-up to break his word.

Fishing was so good that in less than two hours Jerry had as much of a mess as he cared to carry home. He strung them all on a forked tree twig, and put them on some bushes out of the sun.

Jerry had brought a lunch with him and now he devoted his attention to the bread, meat, and doughnuts, with an avidity that proved his appetite had lost none of its vigor. As he ate he looked over the lake and toward a little island not over two hundred feet from the shore.

"Wonder what's on the island?" he asked himself. "Perhaps there are some fine birds' nests there. Guess I'll swim over and take a The swim was indul ed in immediately after

The swim was indul ed in immediately after the last of the doughnuts had disappeared.

Jerry felt perfectly at home in the water, and the fact that the lake was very deep in certain spots did not disturb him. He took a plunge and swam around a bit near shore, and then struck out boldly for the island.

The island was less than three hundred feet square, so it did not take the boy long to walk around and over it. It was covered with a scanty growth of bushes and trees and in some places the rocks were so sharp he had to be careful for fear of cutting his feet. He found only two nests and both of these were empty. Birds were there in plenty, but they took good care to keep out of his reach.

Coming to the shore of the island, Jerry sat down to rest before returning to the mainland. He had scarcely seated himself when he let out a low cry of astonishment and leaped up again.

he let out a low cry of astonishment and leaped up again.

On the shore beyond stood a big black bear. The bear had been sniffing at his clothing, which lay in a heap on the grass. Now bruin was turning his attention to the string of fish resting on the bushes.

"Well, I declare!" murmured Jerry, with his eyes as big as saucers. "A bear! Oh, my! and I haven't even a pistol, much less a gun!"

For fully a minute the bear sniffed at the fish, and then bit into the largest of the catch. It was evidently to his taste, and soon he was feeding as contentedly as if the haul was his own.

"That's what I call ill manners," said Jerry to himself. "He's going to rob me of my fish, and for all I know he'll rob me of my clothes, too. Wonder what I had best do?"

fish, and for all I know he'll fold me of my clothes, too. Wonder what I had best do?"

Jerry knew that bears do not care to swim if they can help it, and he contemplated the stretch of water between himself and the animal with great satisfaction. Then he picked up a sharp stone, took careful aim, and let

As we already know, Jerry was not usually a good marksman. But the object aimed at was large, and now good fortune attended his move. The bear received the stone directly in the left ear. The animal let out a roar of pain and rage and dropped the fish instantly.

"Hi! drop those fish!" roared Jerry, and let fly another stone. This struck the bear in the back, and with a snort the beast turned and went crashing into the forest and out of

JERRY MAKES A FIND.

Jerry was naturally a cautious boy, and Jerry was naturally a cautious boy, and he did not at once return to the mainland. "That bear may be in hiding, ready to pounce on me the minute I land," he thought. "Just guess I'll rest here a bit and see if he comes back."

Jerry waited for half an hour, and then, seeing or hearing nothing further of the animal, swam cautiously across the water once only half of his father's property and that

With his catch in one hand and his asning outfit in the other, he turned back toward the Yarkhurst house. As he advanced deeper and deeper into the woods he kept a keen lookout for the bear. But the animal did not show himself, preferring, doubtless, to keep out of the way of one who could give him as much pain in the ear as he was now suffering.

There were two routes to and from the lake, and in returning home. Jerry took that which pain in the ear as he was now suffering.

There were two routes to and from the lake, and in returning home Jerry took that which was different from the one first pursued. By this means, unknown to himself, he crossed the trail of Indian John, at the exact spot where the worthless red man had confiscated the money in Dick Clarke's pocketbook.

As Jerry strode forward, a shaft of light, striking through the tree, illuminated the spot where the pocketbook rested, so the boy could not but see the article in question.

"A pocketbook!" he exclaimed. "Well, I'm in luck this time for sure. I wonder whether there's much in it?"

Dropping his outfit and his fish, he seized the pocketbook and turned it open.

"Plague take it, just my luck!" he exclaimed, in chagrin. "Not a penny in it!" He turned the object over. "Wonder who it belongs to? Hullo, here's a name, Richard Clarke. So it belongs to the lawyer who is trying to make Miss Mabel and her father so much trouble. Now, did he throw it away, or did somebody rob him of it?"

At his point Jerry espied the papers and letters on the ground, and picked them up one after another. His curiosity was aroused, and he read everything with great care.

letters on the ground, and picked them up one after another. His curiosity was aroused, and he read everything with great care.

The majority of the documents were of small importance but the last paper he perused interested him beyond measure. It was the document left by Mabel's grandfather regarding the hidden box of gold.

"Hurrah! here's the bottom of that mystery!" he cried joyfully. "This is the secret that Mr. Richard Clarke was keeping from Miss Mabel and the squire. Said he must that Mr. Richard Clarke was keeping from Miss Mabel and the squire. Said he must either be allowed to marry Mabel or else he'd keep the money for himself, did he? Well, I guess he'll do nothing of the kind now. He's a rascal if ever there was one, and I'd like a rascal if ever there was one, and I'd like nothing better than to outwit him, and that's just what I am going to do, too!"

Jerry was reading the letter over a second time when, on looking along the trail, he saw Henry Davenport approaching on horseback.

"Hullo! Mr. Davenport," he murmured.

"Wonder if I hadn't better tell him about this? Miss Mabel wanted me to keep mum, but Mr. Davenport ought to know what a rascal Richard Clarke is. Perhaps I had better sound him first."

"Well, Jerry, how are you today?" said Henry Davenport, coming closer. "Been fishing, I see. A nice mess truly."

"How do you do, Mr. Davenport?" returned the boy. "Say, have you seen that man from the tavern around here, that Mr. Richard Clarke?"

"No, I have not. Jerry, what do you thank of him?" questioned the young man in return.
"I think he's a rascal," was the prompt an-

"I think he's a rascal," was the prompt anser.
"You do?"
"Yes, I do."
"What do you know about him?" asked Henry Davenport, a little surprised that Mabel should have made a confidant of the youth before him.
Thinking there might be something which he did not know, and desirous of verifying the truth or falsity of this suspicion, Jerry began to show reserve, and thrusting the important paper slyly into his breast pocket, answered:
"Well, I don't know as I know all that's going on, but I know something that you and Miss Mabel and the squire too would be glad to know."

"Indeed!" said Henry Davenport eagerly.
"What is it? Tell me at once."
But Jerry was too old a bird to be so

"Pshaw, Jerry!" said Davenport, impatiently, "it wouldn't interest you much. Just tell me what it is that you have found out."

"I guess," said Jerry shrewdly, "that what I've found out, wouldn't interest you much, so I guess I won't say anything about it."

"I see," said the young man, "that you are a sharp boy, and I must give up to you. You must know then, that Mabel and myself have made up our minds to—to—"

"Hitch teams," suggested Jerry, with an intelligent nod.
"Well, perhaps that will express it," said

"Well, perhaps that will express it," said the young man, smiling, "but unfortunately for our purpose this lawyer has the presumption to aspire to Mabel's hand also."

"Why don't she tell him to clear out and go about his business?"

"Unfortunately he has in his possession a secret of a most important character which he uses to influence the mind of Mr. Parkhurst, who is so discomposed thereby that Mabel is also made unhappy."

"You don't happen to know what the secret is about?" said Jerry, in a very suggestive tone.

"I see, my boy, you will allow no half-way confidences," said Davenport, laughing. "I might as well be frank and tell you the whole.

half, as you know, he lost through his misfortunes in business."

"What became of the rest?" questioned Jerry, who of course knew all about it, but for certain reasons of his own desired to learn how much the young man knew about it.

"That is just what we don't know and this fellow does. We only know that Mr. Parkhurst's father was afraid his property would be taken away from him during the war, and accordingly converted half of his wealth into gold, and concealed it. He left a letter behind, disclosing the place of concealment, but this letter his son never received or ever saw. By some unlucky accident it fell into the hands of this fellow Clarke, who keeps it to himself, and uses it with Mr. Parkhurst as a means of obtaining his consent to wed Mabel."

"How much money was there?" asked Jerry.

"Elifty thousand dollars!"

"How much more, ""
Jerry.

"Fifty thousand dollars!"

"Crackey! That would make a pile, wouldn't it? I say, it would be worth something to get hold of that letter."

"Yes, I would give something if I could once set eyes on it."

"You would?"

"Of course I would. But how queerly you

"A little exercise," said Jerry demurely.
"But, I say, how much would you give?"
"Five hundred dollars!" said the young man, more for the sake of satisfying Jerry with an answer than from any other reason.
"Then, Mr. Davenport, I guess I'll take it now," said the boy, pulling out the paper from its place of concealment.
"What's that?" demanded Henry Davenport in surprise.

"Just read it, and I guess you'll find it all right," said Jerry.

It was read with emotions of joyful surprise.

"Jerry, you're an angel of good tidings!" the young man exclaimed, clasping the boy's hand warmly in his.

"Thank you for your favorable opinion," said Jerry, his eyes sparkling with merriment. "I'm rather badly off for wings, considering I'm an angel, and I guess you had better let me have the money, so that I can buy a new pair."

His companion laughed. "I won't forget you, Jerry." he said, "but let us go to the house, and tell Mabel and her father of this welcome discovery."

THE FAIR DELIVERER.

Nothing could well be imagined more agravating than the lawyer's situation. To lie upon the ground in a cramped position, with one's limbs confined by a strong cord, can hardly be considered agreeable. But when you add to this that the prospect of deliverance is very uncertain, and that, while so confined, future plans of advantage are in imminent danger of being knocked on the head, it may well be conceived that there are other situations which may be considered preferable.

Such as I have described was the position of the lawyer.

Such as I have described was the position or the lawyer.

"That confounded Indian!" he exclaimed, smarting with the pain of the cord. "I could shot him with a good relish. If he had only left me the paper, I would not have minded the money so much, but it is torture to lie here, not knowing how much mischief he may do." do.

here, not knowing how much mischief he may do."

After a time he became less desponding, and reflected that, after all, things were not quite as bad as they might have been. The mere possession of the paper was nothing to him. It was only important that it should not fall into the hands of others who might make use of it, and especially of those to whom it rightfully belonged. Now, the presumption was that John, who did not know how to read, would destroy the papers contained in the pocketbook as of no value to himself, and as likely, if discovered in his possession, to bring him into trouble. If he destroyed them, well and good. No evil would result to the lawyer, and the secret would still be his.

Dick Clarke, who was of a sanguine temperament, gradually worked himself into the conviction that this was what was most likely to happen. Thus his trouble of mind was somewhat diminished, although his bodily discomfort remained. But his deliverer, although he knew it not, was even now at hand. Mehitable had come out into the woods in search of some peculiar kind of herb which was a sovereign remedy for rheumatism, from the ruthless attacks of which she sometimes suffered.

"Af er all," he said meditatively, "I can't tell whether you will care much for it unless Mabel was the object of his attentions. Besides she knew that an attachment existed between Henry Davenport and her young mistress, a. 1 this was sufficient to prevent her imagining that the lawyer's stay in the village had anything to do with Mabel.

This delusion of hers was encouraged by Jerry, who in the spirit of roguery enjoyed the affected bashfulness and confusion assumed by Mehitable when spoken to on the spirits.

by Mehitable when spoken to on the subject. By his continual teasing he had done much to keep alive in her the hope that her destiny was at hand, and that erelong she would return to New York with the lawyer as his bride.

In fact, it was with this pleasing subject that Mehitable's thoughts were occupied when chance led her to the immediate neighborhood of the prisoner.

of the prisoner.

His quick eyes detected her approach, and recognizing her at once, he called out loudly.

"Who calls me?" asked Mehitable, in a voice tremulous with affright, for it was the fear of her life that the Indians would some day carry her off, though it vould be hard to tell what object they could have in the abduction.

Afraid that she would leave him in her present

Afraid that she would leave him in ner alarm, and so deprive him of the present chance of escape, the lawyer cried: "Don't be afraid. It is only I, Richard Clarke, the lawyer. Surely you know me!"

I am sorry to say Billy has been violently sick again. Toby gave him a newspaper containing an account of the Thaw trial, and Billy, who cannot read, owing to a neglected education, due to his mother being too poor to send him to the Goat School, ate the newspaper, without knowing its deadly nature. Billy was immediately seized with what Toby calls potmaine poisoning, and only the most strenuous efforts of six goat doctors saved his life. Billy says he can swallow carbolic acid, and enjoy it, but when it comes to trying to digest the filthy and disgusting details of the Thaw case, his cast-iron stomach revolts, for that stuff, he says, would poison all the goats that ever munched bottles and chewed cans.

Dear Uncle Charle:

I am sad, always have been sad, and never believed in laughter, never saw anything or heard anything to laugh at until I read your answers to those letter-writers in Comfort: then my sides shook until they stopped shaking.

Augusta must be a pretty little city, with pine trees on each side of its streets. I have often wondered how you get the paper to build Comport with. You must get it cheaply, or for nothing, in order to make a magazine for fifteen cents a year. Perhaps you have permission to cut down a tree and grind it to pulp, and spread it on the ground while you are waiting to go to press. Excuse my ignorance of country ways, but I am anxious to know, so when I buy a farm I can run a magazine just for an occupation, and not for profit. I presume you have to live cheaply down there on your small income; don't have much meat except caribou and hen; send all your eggs to Boston eh? You probably use pine knots for illuminating purposes. Haven't heard of electric light, gas and kerosene, yet, I suppose? Well, you'll get the improvements later on. You don't know how to live yet.

I wonder if you were ever in Boston. It is a big city, and a lonely place for a stranger. You had better let me know when you are coming, so you won't get buncoed, or scared by an automobile. Ever see one? People bump you on the street, and even tread on your toes, but they never stop to beg your pardon. You turn around a corner just as a fellow runs against you. He drives a lighted cigar in your eye, and only says, "oh?" and keeps on. A fellow with a cane under his arm turns around quickly and tears off your watch-chain. Away goes your watch with a dozen boot-blacks after it. A man with an umbrella knocks off your hat in the mud, and a horse's foot puts a crease in it. In trying to run across the street you see too late that a care under his arm turns around quickly and tears off your watch-chain. Away goes your watch with a dozen boot-blacks after i citizens. Chin whiskers are wagging pretty strenuously right now, as we've just got the news of the battle of Bunker Hill, and there is great excitement, and Washington is likely to get all the votes, if he should run again for President on the Republican ticket. You ask if we use pine knots for illuminating purposes? No, we do not: we carry daylight around in bags, as we are in the Arctic Circle, and have six months day, and six months night. During the six months night we sleep, and it takes us the next six months to wake and it takes us the next six months to wake up. Some of us never wake up. Licutenant Peary in his efforts to discover the North Pole. Lieutenant got within nearly two hundred miles of us, when he quit and had to go home. You speak of Electric Light, Kerosene, Gas and Automobiles. What you mean by these terms we do not know What you mean by these terms we do not know. Our oldest men and city fathers have tried to discover what these strange terms imply, but have given it up in despair. I presume they are the names of some distinguished foreigners who are now visiting the great baked bean metropolis, excuse me, I mean bcanopolis, as I believe you are all vegetarians in the Hub, and yours is not a meatropolis. You are quite right in imagining that I live on earibou. My method of securing my daily rations is this: I wait until Carrie Boo comes down the street, then I say "Good morning. Carrie," and she replies, "Boo!" Then I carry Carrie Boo home, and dissect her for culinary purposes. You ask if I was ever in Boston? No, George, I have never been in Boston. Uncle Charlie and the President are compelled to live in the United States, and are not permitted to visit foreign cities, and as I only speak Augusta, I wouldn't be understood by the Bostonese, and the other wild inhabitants of Beanopolis. As soon as a hen lays an egg in this section the City Fathers declare a general holiday, there is a big street parade, with music, and the egg is escorted in state to the depot, where it is at once sent South over the ice floes to your city. On the return of the messenger with the price of the egg—five cents—all business is suspended while the town spends the money. Comfort is printed thus: We get all our wood pulp free. We use sections of the North Pole and convert it into wood pulp. We let the wood pulp run all over the back yard, and freeze to the proper inconsistency, and then we have a hose, and spray the type on to the frozen pulp. Wouldn't that pulp you? Our method of distribution is quite simple. When our whisker crop goes South, we wrap an edition of Comfort round each can. Though our price is small, our advertising rate is five dollars per line; wouldn't that illuminate you? George, in your remarks about Boston, you speak of seeing a car coming both ways at once. From this I infer that you are in the habit of occasionally seeing double at times. From this I also infer that Boston is not in a prohibition state, for when a man can see one solitary street car coming from two different directions at the same time, it's up to him to interview Carrie Nation, and get on the water wagon. George, I thank you for your bouquets, and for your lovely letter, and trust you will keep out of the way of the double street cars, as they are dangerous things to monkey with.

Before closing I must tell about the glorious victory we temperance people had in my county. I attended and participated in one raily. The women and children marched the streets with flags and banners, stopping to sing in front of the village stores. The recitations, music and addresses were excellent and the county went "dry" by a vote of nine hundred and twenty-three majority. This makes ninety-six dry counties in Kentucky, out of one hundred and nineteen in the state. Let the good work go on. Farewell, with best wishes for all.

Blind though you are, God has lit a light in your soul that illumines your pathway and gives you a deeper insight into this and the future lifthan is possessed by any of your neighbors. Millions of people who have eyes are yet only able to see one hundredth part of the good and beautiful in this world. Moral and mental blindness has been the curse of the ages, and many a man has passed Omar Boggs, and said pityingly "He is blind"—whereas it was Omar who was saying "God pity them, for they think they see and don't, they are far more blind than I." Omar Boggs would not exchange his mental vision for good eyesight and mental darkness. I wish you could see the exquisitely neat letter before me. It is typewritten, and only two mistakes in some sixty lines, and those, trifling mechanical ones that the best of typewriters are liable to make. I know lots of typists with good eyesight who could not type a letter as neatly as this to save their necks. Blindness is a terrible affliction, but a blind man can, with education and training do almost everything but paint a picture. A Comfort cousin is Secretary to the President of the New York Association for the Blind (this is your friend Dolores that I once told you about), and she tells me much that is wonderful about the blind. Helen Keller, deaf, dumb and blind is probably the most wonderful woman in the world today. She has conquered her afflictions, and is one of the best educated, brightest, and most intellectual women living. The blind do not want pity, they want opportunities, and a chance to earn a living. Give it to them whenever you can. Dear Uncle Charlele:

I am sorry that I did not get to write to you before, but I was picking cotton and did not have time to write. Did you ever pick cotton? If you did, I guess you know what side rows are. I picked three weeks, and picked side rows with my sweetheart one week, and I can pick one hundred pounds a day. Oh. Uncle, if you could only have seen us. There were sixteen girls and boys, and when some of us went to the house, there were just two rooms—the kitchen and bedroom. There were three beds in the room. We are our supper and then went in the other room, by the fireplace, so that we could hardly get in the room. Now you must not laugh at me, dear Uncle, for it was the first time I had ever picked cotton, for I was a Northern girl, and had not seen cotton before.

Well, I was looking around and wondering where Mrs. Hall was going to have us all to sleep just on three beds. I thought that Mr. Hall and his wife and the two girls on the other bed, and then I knew that six great big boys could not sleep in one bed. But she piled down some feather beds and us girls got in bed on the steads, and the boys got in bed on them on the floor, and none of us took off our clothes, we just pulled off our shoes and piled in.

Uncle Charlie, did you ever go to a candy drawing? I went to my first the other night, and I had so much fun. We played all kinds of games, and it was about ten o'clock when we began to draw candy. They took all the men and boys' names, then one of the women took the pan of candy and tied a cloth over the top, then they called a boy or man, and he would choose a giri or woman, the girl would reach in the pan and get a plece, then the boy would get a plece. The one that had the pan would ske both pieces and see if they were alike, and if they word one new League member, his name is Mr. Jack Pool. You will find inclosed twenty cents for the paper, card and button. Uncle Charlie, you taught me a lesson.

Aletha, your letter is certainly entertaining; but I deeply regret that Mrs. Hall's sleeping accommodations were so limited, though she certainly did remarkably well considering the limited space at her disposal. I should have thought she might have put a bed in the cook stove, and have let the boys sleep in the oven. That reminds me of the time I tried to run a hotel. It was a big hotel with two bedrooms. I used to sleep in the office downto run a notel. It was a big notel with two bedrooms. I used to sleep in the office down-stairs, so as to prevent anyone from stealing the hotel. I had two beds in the hotel, but after a week of bad business, one of the beds was seized for debt. During the first week, I only had one guest, and after he had had his first ment that energy gressed he wouldn't stay. first meal, that guest guessed he wouldn't stay. Ruin stared me in the face, when to my joy an excursion party of two hundred people struck the town. The only other hotel in the place was the town. The only other hotel in the place was full, so full, in fact, it had been arrested and put in jail, and so they all piled down to the Star View Hotel, which I was running (Toby says it was the Starveyou Hotel, but he is always sarcastic.) Well, here was my chance to make some good money. People were offering all sorts of prices for a bed, but two hundred people could not sleep in one bed, at least not in that section though it might be least not in that section, though it might be managed in Brownsville, Ark. Well, I made all the folks register, and pay me in advance. It was a cold night, so I let them hold their hands over the register, while they registered and get warm. Then I showed the first two guests upstairs, and they hadn't been in that room five minutes before they were both snor-ing. I opened the door with a pass key, and carried first one and then the other down back stairs, and laid them in the cellar. T carried first one and then the other down the back stairs, and laid them in the cellar. Then I rushed into the office and took two more up, and waited outside until I heard them snoring, and then down the back stairs they went on the double quick. I kept this up, until I had the mob fast asleep in the cellar. They had been on that train forty-eight hours, and were so dead tired you could have run a freight train over them without waking them. One old man weighed three hundred and eighty pounds, and I let him fall downstairs. He landed on his cocoanut, and all he said was "Mandy, quit giving me them love pats." I'll bet he had often been soaked with a club. I got two hundred out of one bed in one night, and that's what I call business, but the trouble is, you can't stay and do business of that kind right along, you have to run, after the first haul. One man, one bed, is the vital principle for which Washington and our forefathers fought and bled, and when you start putting two hundred people into one bed in one night, you're butting into trouble. Aletha, you can tell this story to your friend, and the next time she puts six boys into one bed, tell her to wait until they are asleep, and dump them in the back yard.

Think of it, one little girl, extracting music from an entire state. I tried to play Oregon once, but they wouldn't stand for my game, but Grace can play Oregon, and doubtless any other state if she had the mind to. What a majestic instrument! The United States converted into one huge pipe organ, and Gracie giving a grand performance monthly every day. Oregon ought to produce some fine music, if you punched the keys down hard, and banged both feet on the loud pedal. Gracie, you are the official organist of the C. L. O. C., but how can you play on Oregon, and live in Illinois? Don't you think the people of Oregon will be Ill O'noise too, if you give them too much of your music. I am very fond of music, dear, especially the Juice harp—that is liquid music and it is very refreshing. I like to hear a baby sing when it has the colic—there is something very soothing in music of that kind, reminds one of Wagner at his best. I love to hear songouds gurgling in a sink, a there is something very soothing in music of that kind, reminds one of Wagner at his best. I love to hear soapsuds gurgling in a sink, a cyclone breathing out its young soul in a storm sewer, and little Willie extracting a nocturne from a washboiler with a fence rail, or an arpergio from an egg box with a healthy club. Some people may say that my musical tastes are deprayed, but, Gracie, if it came to a show down as to whether I had to sit through the periodical attacks of a young lady with acute pianoitis, or take in the weird cacophony of sound outlined above, I think, dear, without wishing to cast the least reflection on the musical ability of budding youth, that I'd rather hear a four-legged gentleman with bristles offering up his melodic protest at being converted into pork by the sanguinary executioner of the hog shambles, than hear the average young lady scale the piano. This is no reflection on your musical ability, but simply a confession of depraved tastes. If you'd come into my coop and make a noise like a five dollar bill, you'd have me hypnotized with delight, but if you have no objection, you can keep the piano locked up for a little while longer—say a couple of hundred years—until I am old enough to appreciate real genuine, healthy, unadulternted up for a little while longer—say a couple of hundred years—until I am old enough to appreciate real genuine, healthy, unadulterated music, of the kind you turn out so exquisitely. Home, R. F. D., 2, Pa., Jan. 10, 1907.

Dear Uncle and Cousins:

When I joined your C. L. O. C. one year ago, I sent you a letter which never appeared, so I will try again, hoping for better success this time. How many of us have been successful in doing or accomplishing the object of our heart's greatest desire? I know many of us have met with bitter disappointment, which turned the currents of our lives entirely.

For almost nine years I have been lying helpless with rheumatism, and have only my right eye and left hand left me now to use. I have been on the train four times and enjoyed the trips very much, although I had to ride in the baggage car, lying on a spring cot, which they placed near the open door, so that I might so out. I am an old "bach" of twenty-eight, without parents, means or home.

Giving all my love and best wishes, I am, ever your true shut in cousin, WM. V. Kinter.

Thank you, William, for the way you've penned your letter. I wish all the cousins who have health and strength wrote as nearly as you do, and yet, you have only your left hand and one eye to aid you, while they have their hands and faculties unimpaired. Will, you've had a rough time of it, but I'm glad you are keeping a stiff upper lip, and are facing your troubles bravely. I wish Mrs. Sage's millions could reach cases like yours, but they won't. The country shut-ins have no friends, no one to plead their cause. Those in the city have The country snurins in the city have to plead their cause. THERE IS NO PARDON FOR DESECRATED IDEALS.

ORTHY? No, No! Unworthy! most worthy! But was Thomas worthy to tend the wandering sheep of Him, whom face to face he doubted? Was Peter worthy to preach the Gospel of Him, whom he had thrice indignantly denied? Was Paul worthy to become the Apostle of the Gentlies, teaching the doctrine of Him whose disciples he had persecuted and slaughtered? If the repentance of Peter and Paul availed to purify their hands and hearts, and sanctify them to the service of Christ, ah! God knows my contrition has been bitter and lasting enough to fit me for future usefulness. Eight months ago, when the desire to become a minister seized me so tenaciously, I wrested with it, tried to crush it; arguing that the knowledge of my past life of sinfulness would prevent the world from trusting my professions. But those who even slightly understand my character, must know that I have always been too utterly indifferent to, too unfortunately contemptuous of public opinion, to stoop to any deception in order to conciliate it. Moreover, the world will realize that in a mere worldly point of view, I can possibly hope to gain nothing by this step.

If I were poor, I might be accused of wanting the loaves and fishes of the profession; if unknown and ambitious, of seeking eminence and popularity. But when a man of my wealth and social position, after spending half of his life in luxurious ease and sinful indulgence, voluntarily subjects himself to the rigid abstemiousness and self-sacrificing requirements of a ministerial career, he cannot be suspected of hypocrisy. After all, sir, I care not for the discussion, the nine days' gossip and wonder, the gibes and comments my course may occasion. I am hearkening to the counsel of my conscience; I am obeying the dictates of my heart. Feeling that my God accepts me, it matters little that men may reject me. My remorse, my repentance, has been inexpressibly bitter; but the darkness has passed away, and today, thank God! I can pray with all the fervor and faith of my boyhood, when I knew that I was at peace with my Maker. Oblivion of the past I do not expect, and perhaps should not desire. I shall always wear my melancholy memories of sin, as Mussulmen wear their turban or pall—as a continual memento of death. Recause I have proved so fully the inadequacy of earthly encounted the world over and over; I have sought it everywhere else, and now, thank God! I feel that it is descending slowly, slowly, but surely, upon my lonely, long-tortured heart. Thank God! I feel that it is descending slowly, slowly, but surely, upon my lonely, long-tortured heart. "St. Elmo, the purity of your motives will never be questioned, for none who knows you could believe you capable of dissembling in this matter; and my heart can scarcely contain its joy when I look forward to your future, so bright with promise, so full of usefulness. The marked change in your manner during the past two years has prepared this community for the important step you are to take today, and your influence with young men will be incalculable. Once your stern bitterness rendered you an object of dread; now I find that you are respected, and people here watch your conduct with interest, and even with anxiety. Ah, St. Elmo! I never imagined earth held as much pure happiness as is my portion today. To see you one of God's anointed! To see you ministering in the temple! Oh! to know that when I am gone to rest you will take my place, guard my flock, do your own work and poor Murray's, and finish mine! This, this is indeed the crowning blessing of my old age."

For some minutes, Mr. Hammond sobbed; and, lifting his face, Mr. Murray answered:

"As I think of the coming years consecrated to Christ, passed peacefully in endeavoring to atome for the injury and suffering I have inflicted on my fellow-creatures; oh! as the picture of a calm, useful, holy future rises before me, I feel indeed that I am unworthy most unworthy of my peace; but, thank God!

'Oh! I see the crescent promise of my spirit hath not set; knowledge and love of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord; and the blessing of God Almighty, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, be among you, and remain with you alway."

And all hearts and lips present whispered "Amen!" and the organ and the choir broke forth in a grand "Gloria in excelsia."

Standing there at the chancel, purified, conscrated henceforth unreservedly to Christ, Mr. Murray looked so happy, so noble, so worthy of his high calling, that his proud, fond mother thought his face was lit for an archangel's wings. Many persons who had known him in his boyhood, came up with tears in their eyes, and wrung his hand silently. At last Huldah pointed to the white pigeon, that was now beating its wings against the gilded pipes of the organ, and said in that singularly sweet, solemn, hesitating tone, with which children approach sacred things:

"Oh, Mr. Murray! winen it fell on the pulpit, it nearly took my breath away, for I almost thought it was the Holy Ghost."

Tears, which till then he had bravely kept back, dripped over his face, as he stooped and whispered to the little orphan:
"Huldah, the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, came indeed; but it was not visible, it is here in my heart."

The congregation dispersed. Mr. Murray and the preacher and Huldah went to the carriage; and, leaning on Mr. Murray's arm, Mr. Hammond turned to follow, but observing that the church was empty, the former said:

"After a little, I will come."

The old man walked on, and Mr. Murray went back and knelt, resting his head against the beautiful giltering balustrade, within which he holyed to officiate through the remaining years of his earthly career.
Once the sexton, who was waiting to lock up the church, looked in, saw the man praying alone there at the altar, and softly stole away.

When St. Elmo came out, the churchyard seemed deserted; but as he crossed it, going homeward, a woman rose from one of the tombstones and stood before him—the yellow-haired Jezebel, with sapphire eyes and soft, treacherous red lips, who h

"Edna Earl!—a puritanical fanatic! Nay, a Pharisee! A cold prude, a heartless blue! A woman with some brain and no feeling, who loves nothing but her own fame, and has no sympathy with your nature. The cripple shuddered and shut his eyes. He had wasted away, until he looked a mere shadow of humanity, and his governess stooped and took him from his mother's arms, as if he were a baby.

For the Boys

HE letter which heads "Correspondence" is my excuse for deserting the poultry-yard this month, and as mothers, whose boys take up useful occupations during the long summer holidays will be spared a lot of small worries, I feel sure of being forgiven.

One of the good points about pigeon raising, for boys who have to be away at school is that for boys who have to be away at school, is that food can be left before them all the time. They won't overeat, as chickens do. Another advantage is that the old birds take all the advantage is that the old birds take all the trouble and responsibility of the young ones. One of the chief dangers to which pigeons are subject is rats. To insure safety from these vicious pests it is best to get four strong cedar posts, four feet long, sink them two feet into the ground, and stand the coops on them like a corn crib. When the inside of your coop is fitted up, you will know how many birds it will accommodate, for each pair must have a box two feet long, one foot deep, and the same high, with a partition through the middle, making two compartments, each a foot square, with a six-inch platform projecting in front. middle, making two compartments, each a foot

These boxes can be fitted in tiers. from These boxes can be utted in tiers, from floor to roof, all around the coop or house used for the pigeons. Empty egg-crates are just about the size, and have the partitions already in them. If you can possibly afford just about the size, and have the partitions already in them. If you can possibly afford it, get earthenware nests; they cost only fifteen cents each, and are better than anything else, being just the right size and shape, and can be quickly and thoroughly cleaned by washing in boiling water. If you can't afford them, make boxes eight inches square and three inches deep.

When all the carpentering is done, give the inside of the coop, boxes and nests (unless the later are earthenware), a coat of thick whitewash; cover the floor with sand; get a box six inches square, make a lid of a piece of wire netting and fill with coarse, sharp grit, standing it in one corner. Pigeons, like all birds, depend on grit to grind their food, having no teeth. The wire cover is to prevent the birds from getting into the box and scattering the contents on the floor. A box for feed should be fixed in the same way.

A drinking fountain is another requisite for the coop. Zinc ones can be bought for thirty-five cents, or you can make quite a good one. Take a strong tin such as fundates.

A drinking fountain is another requisite for the coop. Zinc ones can be bought for thirty-five cents, or you can make quite a good one. Take a strong tin, such as tomatoes come in. Stand it out end down on the stove, until the heat loosens the solder, when you can push off the end rim, leaving a smooth edge, from which measure half an inch, and there make a hole, the size of a pea. Then get a pie plate, half an inch larger all round than the can: fill it with water, put the plate on top, hold it firmly pressed, then turn it quickly upside down, and you will have a self-feeding drinking fountain as serviceable as any that can be bought.

Hang up a bundle of hay or straw in a corner for the birds to use in nest building. Another old pan should contain old mortar, or air-slacked lime and rock salt broken up and air-slacked lime and rock salt broken up and air-slacked lime and rock salt broken up and mixed.

The yard for, say, five pairs, should be twenty-five feet long and ten feet wide. Such a coop as we have been making will probably stand, when on the posts, about ten feet high, so, if you fasten a pole to each front corner, three feet higher t an the roof of the coop, and to all the posts around the yard eight feet above the ground, the roof will be inclosed. This makes a fine resting and sunning place for the birds. Of course the yard must be wire-netted all round, over the top as well as at the sides. One roll of two-inch mesh netting, forty-eight inches wide, costing about $4, will cut to the best advantage for a yard of the above dimensions.

When you buy your stock, get good, pure Homers in pairs, ready mated. Pigeons are very faithful, remaining paired for years. If accident separates them, it's often impossible to get either of them to accept strange mates that season. Avoid having odd birds; it causes fights which destroy the nesting.

If you should have to pair birds yourself, put them in a two-compartment cage.

If you should have to pair birds yourself, put them in a two-compartment cage. If you haven't one, make a division with wire netting, through the middle of a case, three feet long, with a netting door to cover the whole front. Put a bird in each compartment, and when they kiss and con through the netting when they kiss and coo through the netting, they can be put together for two or three days; after which it will be safe to put them in the breeding-house. They will soon com-mence to build their nests by carrying a few bits of hay, or whatever the nesting material may be, into one of the earthenware or wooden

The hen bird lays two eggs, with one day between. Sixteen to eighteen days are required to hatch. Both the old birds have the power to create a digested food, almost as liquid, called by fanciers "pigeons' milk", with which they feed the young for four or five days. Then they are gradually accustomed to grain and grit.

About the fifteenth day the nest in the second content of the second and compartment is built, and again the mother bird lays two eggs and proceeds to incubate them, leaving the first pair of babies principally to the care of the male, until, at the end of thirty days, you relieve him, by the end of thirty days, you relieve him by taking them for market.

This double family continues all through the year with good Homers, well cared for, excepting when they are moulting.

Red wheat and cracked corn mixed is the best food to keep permanently before pigeons. Twice or thrice a week give a special feed as a treat, of Canada peas, hemp-seed, stale bread, Kaffir corn. When there are squab in the nest, crack the peas, or the old ones might give the babies more of the whole ones than they could digest.

Rabbits

The hutch should be two and a half feet long, two feet wide, and a foot and a half high. Make a frame of shingle slabs just the size of the front, and cover with one-inch wire netting; attach to one end a big hinge, top and bottom; at the other, catch a wire to act as a fastener. This is the most convenient kind of a door, because it leaves the whole front open for cleaning.

whole front open for cleaning.

In the doe's hutch, another box, a foot square, the top hinged like a lid, and in front an arched hole six inches high and five wide, must be cut, so Bunny can go in and out to make her nest, and attend to her babies. Two small butter crocks, at five cents each, make the best feed and water dishes.

Mr. Bunny must have a house all to himself, because he is always very cross to the little ones. When they are six weeks old, the mother can be allowed to visit him for a they have the belief must be proved to the terms. day, and then the babies must be put into another hutch, or sold, and the mother's quarters thoroughly whitewashed all through,

The floor of the hutch should have a thick The noor of the nutch should have a thick layer of sawdust, or common bedding hay, whichever is the easier to procure. No matter which is used, it must all be cleared out twice a week, and fresh bedding supplied, for rabbits must be kept clean. In fact, there is the secret of success with all animals.

is the secret of success with all animals.

Mrs. Bunny must have an extra supply of bedding, because she carries it in her mouth to the nest box until she fills it; then she makes a hole, about four inches in circumference, right in the center. This she lines with hair that she plucks from her own breast, and sides, to make the nesting-place for her babies soft and warm—very necessary in th.s case, for it is nine days before they get their coats. or open their eyes; and during that and sides, to make the nesting-place for her babies soft and warm—very necessary in this case, for it is nine days before they get their coats, or open their eyes; and during that time, not a hint does she give you of their existence. She even closes the opening to the hole with hay, and pretends to have no interest in it at all. About the tenth day you will get glimpses of little staggering bodies, running to hide in their nest when you go to feed them. They are about 'fteen days old before they really play about the hutch, and have courage enough to be looked at.

Food for old ones can be grass, plantain, dandelion, oak leaves, lettuce, and almost all green garden stuffs, as long as they last, and a small handful of oats once a day.

In the winter, Lay, oats and corn mixed, apple, carrot, tops of celery, etc. Avoid turnips and cabbage, because they make the odor from the hutches very strong; and cabbage is most dangerous for young ones, giving them what is called "pot-belly". The rule about all vegetable food is to watch the droppings, which should be round, dry pellets; if they are soft or run together, stop greens and grass, feeding only hay or oats, and weak, cold tea to drink. A piece of stale bread, or dry toast, is also good.

Mamma Bunny should have a little bread and milk every day, from the time she builds her nest until the babies are three weeks old. Carrot is good for her, too. About a week before you take the little ones away, give her a sprig of parsley every other day.

When the young ones are ten days old, put a flat dish on the floor of the hutch filled with rolled oats; the entire rough grain with the hard on is good to is an experience of them.

with rolled oats; the entire rough grain with the hulls on is too coarse for them. Occasionally, to supply pieces of hickory or oak with the bark on is good; so is an acorn a natural tonic. Once a week the drinking water needs a pinch of salt, or the oats can be steeped in salt and water for twelve hours, strained, spread out, dried, then used.

If you follow this method of feeding, you will have lots of young ones for sale, and no deaths to mourn over. Remember, too, the old-time idea that rabbits don't want water is cruelty to animals; they are thirsty little people as you will find.

Correspondence

A Farm Boy.—I am eleven years old, and want to make some money of my own. Mother says I can have a little house and shed that is near the barn, and I want to sell squabs and white rabbits. Could you please tell me how to raise them. I can sell all I can raise in the town. Another boy, who is nine, will go in with me. You once wrote a plece about a boy who made a lot with chickens, but father won't have any more chickens on our place. I hope you will answer this soon, as we are in a hurry to know, and another boy wants to know, too. A.—I am very glad to help you. The "Poultry Farming For Women" shall be all pigeons and rabbits for boys, this month, so turn to the beginning, read all through, and I think you will know how to raise and care for them. Write me again if you want any more help.

F. M.—I bought a pair of pheasants last fall, and the hen has commenced to lay. I am going to set the eggs under a bantam hen. Please tell me how long they take to hatch, and how the little ones should be fed. (2) Can I hatch geese eggs in the same incubator as the hens eggs? and if not, why? (3) When the young pheasants get old enough to leave the hen can they be put into the same yard as the old birds?

pheasants get oid enough to leave the hen can they be put into the same yard as the old birds?

A.—Pheasants' eggs take from twenty-five to twenty-six days to hatch. Feed nothing for twenty-four hours; then, boiled custard (beat one egg, and add it to a pint of milk, just as it comes to the boiling point. Stir over the fire until it thickens. Stand aside to cool.) Mix one tablespoonful with the same quantity of the following ingredients: Crushed mustard seed, crushed hulled oats, one teaspoonful of maw seed (poppy seed), same of chopped green onlon tops. Feed every two hours, between 5.30 A. M. and 4.30 P. M., for the first week; after which, pot cheese, pinhead oatmeal, crushed wheat, coarse corn meal well steamed, finely chopped lettuce or onlons and boiled liver can be gradually added to the bill of fare, and the custard dropped out. Meat, vegetables, and fruits are all necessary, as they grow older. Ant eggs, tent caterpillars, and all small plant insects are enjoyed, and should be fed whenever they can be found. (2) No, you can't successfully hatch geese and hens' eggs at the same time in an incubator. I can't give you all the reasons in this column, but the principal ones are as follows: Geese eggs need more moisture and take longer to incubate. It would be impossible to maintain the correct degree of heat in the machine, when the hen chicks were removed. (3) The half-grown pheasants will do better in an inclosure alone. Keep the hen with the little ones as long as she will stay. The wire round the yard for young pheasants must not be more than half-inch mesh, or they will get out.

W. J. M.—Is there anyway to prevent hens fighting on the nest? I have had two sets of eggs broken. My neighbor says that if I remove the hen to another place, she will stop wanting to set.

A.—If hens are allowed to set in the chicken house, I know of no way to prevent other hens trying to get into the nest to lay, which is nsually the cause of fights and broken legs; but I don't agree with your neighbor, for we always move broody hens, after dark, and set them in a small house kept especially for their occupation, giving them china eggs at first, until sure that they really mean business, then changing them for the real eggs; and seldom find that it makes any difference to a good setter. And any other sort is better found out at once, for a flighty hen will make a bad mother, even if she hatches the eggs.

MY DEARS:

Estelle Poynter wishes that someone would write up an article on goats, and bees, two very interesting and profitable animals to keep, and by women too. First there are many different kinds of goats, among them being, the Syrian, Angora and Cashmere, all remarkable for the greater length and fineness of their hair. The Angora can be and are kept extensively in our own country; they can be clipped annually, the hair being used for knife handles, and the fat is said to be superior to that of the ox for candies.

MY DEARS:

The common domestic goet is not to be despised by any means, they can endure both heat and cold, and are not subject to so many diseases as the sheep. The fiesh of the goat is good, that of the kid deemed a great delicacy in some sections, and the milk is very rich and nutritious, more easy of digestion than that of the cow, and is often useful to consumptive patients; some goats yield as much as four quarts of milk dally, though the average quantity is more nearly two. Both cheese and butter are made of goats milk; they have a peculiar, though not disagreeable flavor. And didyou know that the belligerent Billy Goat is good, that of the kind deemed hydrous and their skins are valuable for making gloves and th

There are many ways a woman can make a living in the country, and men to, and how much better off they and their families would be, working out in the pure, sweet air than shut up in the germ-ladened, foul atmosphere of some city tenement house. "Women and children have to work so hard in the country." so they do, but what is the difference, they are being slowly reurdered in the cities, by the above conditions; they seldom own the roof over their heads, which is one satisfaction in the country. Homes are cheap enough now in many sections of our dear, old New England states, where there are so many old and abandoned farms, which after resting for so long are as good as new. What crops can be raised on some of those farms that have lain idle for years. Like peoole, land needs a rest, and these places have had it, and now could be made to bloom like a rose. Many men or women, working on a small salary, with crops can be raised on some of those farms that have lain lide for years. Like peoole, land needs a rest, and these places have had it, and now could be made to bloom like a rose. Many men or women, working on a small salary, with practically no home, could, with a little head and bodily work, own their own place, a little house and a few acres of land, on which could be raised berries, nearly all kinds, rhubarb and vegetables; the first year set out a few good fruit trees, get a few hens and start a small poultry plant. A man could have a strong pair of horses, and neither he nor the horses need be idle if the near-by farmer knew they could work. Only think of having real cream milk, and all the sweet golden butter one could use, hot biscuits for tea with some pure comb honey, that one's very own bees had made, and if there are maple trees on the place (as is the case nearly all over New England), what lovely maple syrup can be manufactured, right at home, which does not cost anything but the labor. John, after reading this put on your thinking cap, and think real hard.

Florence. I wish all my girls and boys could read all of your letter, but I am going to let them see part of it. "We have been married just a little over a year (W C and I), and we have a homestead, twenty acres cleared, we have built about a mile of fence, made fifty-two hundred pallings, have about two acres of land for a potato patch. I help him, and he helps me. I helped him saw nearly all the logs for our cabin, and also helped him draw the logs up on the wails of the cabin." What a pity that more of our young people just starting out do not emulate this young couple.

Thereas Blashke's address is Beeville, Texas. Carrie. Yours received, but my correspondence is way behind, owing to my illness, so I cannot write for a time. I am glad you and baby are better. Let us live on fruit, and our good fresh vegetables, instead of heavy greasy meats this warm weather. Get up early and do all we can Amatite is built of materials that have been tried and tested under every possible weather condition:—each part is tested—the whole is tested before it goes to you.

Is that done with shingles, tin or ordinary ready roofings? How many bad shingles do you find in a bundle? How often do you have to paint or coat the smooth ready roofings to keep them tight? Think about these things—and when you need a new roof, you'll buy Amatite—the roofing with a real mineral surface, which does away with painting and repairs. Any one can lay it—no skilled labor required.
